Commerce, to consider the proposition to send relief to the "loyal" citizens of Savannah, a number of speeches were made. We have only room for the following:

Capt. Marshall here arose and said that with regard to coaxing these people back into the Union, he had despaired if it entirely .---My friend, Mr. Blunt, said he, has recently returned from Tennessee, and he says there is not a particle of Union sentiment existing there. I know there is scarcely any in Louisinna; and I have long despaired of anything. except through bayonets and bullets. This, I am satisfied, is the only way that this Union can ever be restored. They must come back by conquest. We have had exough of this milk and water business. We have seen, through the process of three or four years, that the only way to bring back the rebels is to whip them back. We have seen that there is no Union sentiment among them, and that they expect this kind of treatment and nothing else-that they expect never to come back into the Union, except through the medium of sharp steel and hot lead. Therefore, I do not believe in all this talk ; there is nothing in it at all.

Gen. Walbridge called for a vote on his resolution. Before the vote was put, however.

General Watmore was in favor that nothing should go forth from the Committee in opposition to Captain Marshall's sentiments. In the action of the Committee the sentiment of New York, and indeed of the whole country, should be seen, to the effect that this, rebellion is to be put down by force of a ms alone. And, while the rebellion was under discussion, he would add that England and France are recognizing the President of the United States as only the President of a portion of the nation and not of the whole.

Before the meeting adjourned, Gen. Walbridge expressed himself of a similar opinion with Captain Marshall and Gen. Watmore .--He was in favor of putting down the rebels by force of arms, and attending to France and England afterward.

duil at forty-seven and eight. In the afternoon, several small sums were sold at the latter price, though the market, at a later bour, had a downward terdency.

Several causes have combined to bring about this effect :- the strenuous measures recomnended by Mr. Trenholm, Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress ; the decided action of that body in determining, by a vote of fortythree yeas, to thirly-one mays, to seize all the cotton and tobacco in the Confederacy, on Government account; and the closing of the port of Wilmington. The scheme of finance now determined apon, and likely to be carried into effect, may be comprehensively stated thus : The cotton and tobacco of the country, having been male the property of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury will proceed, under authority of Congress, to berrow specie, giving cotton and tobacco as security. This specie will be speedily applied to the redemption of a large portion of the Confederate notes now afloat at a moderate discuut. No more notes to be issued by the Department: but the incoming currency to be used for Government expenditure or cancelled The cotton and tobaces seized will be paid for in Confederate money at the market rates (gold being the basis), at the rate of discount fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury in the redemption of the currency. An effort will be made to reduce the volume of the currency to a certain amount, and, if possible, to prevent its increase. This course of policy, although not formally entered upon, has, nevertheless, already been somewhat effective.

The fall of Fort Fisher, and the subsequent closing of the port of Wilmington, though decmed disastrous in a military point of view, has necessarily diminished the value of gold by lessening the demand. The public are not aware of the vast amount of influence xercised over the gold market by the operatious of the blockade-running at Wilmington. From twenty thousand to one hundred thousand dollars in gold were required to meet the weekly demands of the buyers, and arl fall the gold drawn from the market flowed out through that channel. On Monday merning last, oue thousand dollars in gold were sold at sixty two and a half in Con-MESSES. EDITORS :- You will see by the | federate money for one in specie.
