Night's Darkest Hour.

Whether there is much, or any, truth in the common saying, that the darkest hour of the night is always just before morning, and that the tempest is most commonly then at its height, the writer will not pretend to say, though he considers it to a pretty good extent verified by his own observation.

But whether it be so or not, it is, at all events, a popular conceit, and, as such, has served as the groundwork for the following lines.

I've wandered long—I've wandered far, From youth to hoary age;

In joy and grief, in peace and war, I've trod life's troubled stage;

And many a dark and weary hour I've seen along my way.

But always found the darkest hour Was just before the day.

I've stood upon the mountain's peak, I've stood within the vale,

And marked the storms above that break Or down the depths prevail;

I've watched those storms of deepest lower, From eve till morning gray,

But ever found the tempest's power Was just before the day.

Sad soul! look up—thy night of care Perhaps is almost past;

The morn'g thou now art called to hear, To this may be the last;

Behind the clouds the skies are bright, The clouds must pass away,

The darkest hour of every night Is just before the day.

My country! O my country! hear This voice from Heaven to thee,

That comes, in thy dark hour, to cheer And say thou'rt 'not yet free!

Press on brave hearts! nor cringe, nor cower, Nor fear t' unequal fray,

The darkest hour, the tempest's power, Are just before the day.

T. S. W. Mgt.

As a substantive somewhat obsolete, but used by old writers in the sense of gloominess, violence, affliction, etc.

OUR VICTORY NEAR MURFREESBORO.

"Ora," the intelligent army correspondent of the Mobile Register, who is no friend of Bragg's, and who was at first loud in his censure of the "falling back" from Murfreesboro, makes the following frank admissions in his letter of the 9th instant:

So far as our victory over the enemy is concerned, it is complete, and may be considered the greatest battle of the war, viewing the disparity in numbers, for we really had not 25,000 troops on the field, and drove back over 75,000 of the best troops the Federal had, being principally Western men, who are far superior to the Yankees of the North. The immense number of wagons and stores destroyed, property burnt, with 5,000 stands of arms, nearly forty pieces of cannon, and over 5,000 prisoners captured, certainly give us the privilege of claiming a glorious victory.

As to our falling back at the time the enemy did, it is rather a good joke, but it must be remembered that our men had been eight days and nights on the open field, without shelter and exposed to heavy rains and freezing weather, besides fighting night and day, and they had become exhausted to such a degree that judgment at leasting the loss of our army, which would have been calamity from which we could not have recovered. We have suffered neither the disgrace of defeat nor the being driven from our position, however much our soldiers may have regretted to leave their dearly won battle-field, this was truly a military necessity of choice, and not of compulsion.

Had not Stevenson's division been taken from us, I am confident we would have destroyed the enemy's army and regained Nashville, which would have ended, or at least gone far towards, ending the war.

A GALANT SOLDIER.—A writer in the Mobile Tribune pays the patriotism and gallantry of Col. James T. Corral, of Missouri, a high and handsome compliment. The Colonel is a native of Person county, N. C., but removed to Missouri when quite young. He was one of the regular officers in the old army; but when the war broke out took sides with the South. He raised a company of men in St. Louis, and was on the eve of marching to the South when a strong Yankee guard confined both him and his men within the limits of the city. The company was of necessity disbanded, and a vigilant search made for him; but by the surprise of the enemy, which they heard, Captain Corral escaped by the aid of his men. He was in the front of the battle of Oak Hill, for his gallantry and daring, he being at the time a member of the General's staff, with the rank of Lt. Colonel. At the battle of Lexington he so distinguished himself that a newly organized regiment unanimously chose him for its Colonel. He was a General's aide, and was in the south-west campaign, and was considered his best cavalry officer in the service. At the battle of Elk Horn, while leading his regiment to a charge, he received a terrible wound in his left shoulder, but did not leave his command until some time after, although the wound was thought by the surgeons to be a mortal one. He is still a sufferer from the effects of his wound, which has almost deprived him of the use of his arm; notwithstanding which he has reported himself for duty. Col. Corral was here, we understand, a month or two ago, on a visit to his native State and county, but we had not the pleasure of forming his acquaintance.—Milton Chronicle.

DEATH OF A SCULPTOR.—We regret to announce the death of Alexander Galt, Esq., a well known sculptor, who breathed his last in this city, on Monday, after a brief illness. Mr. Galt was a native of Virginia. His works are numerous, and rank well beside those whose fame is more widely spread. Prominent among them may be mentioned the statue of Jefferson, at the University of Virginia, which has elicited the praise due to an achievement of superior merit; the bust of Columbus in armor; "Bacchante" and "Sincerity," works of true genius, which would have secured renown at home and abroad; and a number of less notable, but by the hands of one of our most gifted artists, and living he would have asked no better reward. He died in the prime of manhood, at the age of about thirty-five years.—Richmond Whig.

SAD DEATH.—The Petersburg Express regrets to have to announce the sudden and painful death of Capt. D'Arcy W. East of this city, commanding Co. K, 12th Va. Regiment, which occurred in camp, five miles South of Fredericksburg, on Tuesday morning last. The intelligence reached his family at a late hour night before last, overweighing them in grief at the sudden loss. He was crushed by the falling of a tree, felled by the hands of one of his own men, while asleep a few yards distant in his tent.

The celebrated Gen. Ewell, "Stonewall's" right arm, once said, speaking of the writ of habeas corpus being served on some one, "—in it, we military men always make a compromise, hang the corpus, and let the habeas go to the devil."

It is now said the Florida, John Newland Maffitt, commander, sunk the iron-clad gunboat Hatteras, off Galveston, and not the terrible Alabama.

The resolution in favor of W. L. Shannon and Daniel Tucker, were passed their several readings under a suspension of the rules.

NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. NEW SERIES. IT IS CONTEMPLATED TO RESUME THE PUBLICATION of the North Carolina Christian Advocate as an early day, under the patronage of the North Carolina Conference, and under the direction and ownership of a joint stock Company, composed of ministers and laymen, to secure its permanency. It will be as its name imports, a CHRISTIAN Advocate.—It will sustain and defend the doctrines and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and labor to advance Christ's Kingdom on earth, and to promote peace and good will among all men. Besides its earnest, religious character, it shall be an advocate of the moral, educational and industrial progress of North Carolina—a welcome visitor to every family, and to the camps of our brave soldiers, and a faithful chronicler of what may be useful and interesting, and of the current news. All our traveling and local ministers and the stockholders of the Company, are especially requested to act as Agents for the paper. The old subscribers of the Advocate will be supplied with the new series, to the full amount due them at the time of its suspension, but as the mail books are not in the possession of the Editor, he must rely on the old subscribers themselves and the Agents, to furnish him with their names and post offices and the amount due them.
