

From the Journal of the 10th. GENERAL HOWARD'S SPEECH.—At half past 7, on Saturday evening a very respectable audience had assembled at the Theatre to hear an address by Maj Gen O. O. Howard, Chief of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, delivered by request of influential citizens of the town. The address was made in a conversational style and was well received by the audience. The General commenced his remarks by stating that he was with the army of Gen. Sherman, when he received orders to report to Washington, for what he was not informed, but received the intimation on his way, that he was to be charged with the organization of the Bureau of Freedmen, authorized by an act of Congress. He then went on to speak of the difficulties and arduous labors he had experienced in the organization of this bureau, and gave a full explanation of its objects and purposes. He accepted this position with no intention of doing injustice to the white man or the black man. The organization of the bureau was absolutely necessary. Four million of negroes had been suddenly emancipated, and they must be taken care of and provided for. If there had been any mismanagement or negligence on the part of subordinate officers, they alone were to be censured and not the Bureau. The General then spoke of the social relations of the negro. He also stated that he was a soldier by education and profession, that he had never entered the political arena, and did not now intend to touch any points political in his character. He endeavored to prove that unless their right to testify in the courts was recognized, their freedom was a mockery. He was unwilling to leave them for protection to public sentiment. He believed that the best friend of the negro ought to be, at least, their former masters, but that he could not rely on the popular feeling at the South, nor at the North alone, for a guarantee of the rights of this large class of our people. They must be protected by law, and the sooner the South acknowledge this fact the sooner they will be restored to their constitutional rights in the Union. Without the restraints of law their freedom was only nominal. The General was very mild and conciliatory in the expression of his views. He entertained no feelings of ill will or bitterness towards the people of the South, said that his association had been nearly as much with Southern men as with Northern men; that he had some knowledge of the institution of slavery and did not credit all the reports of brutality that were circulated in the North, nor did he believe all the polished stories of its mildness that emanated from the South. Upon the whole, the remarks of the General were characterized by that liberality of sentiment which will not fail to gain him friends and admirers wherever he may go in the South, even among those, and they are many, perhaps the majority, who cannot coincide with all his views. The attention with which he was listened to is an evidence of the appreciation by his hearers, of the candid and honest manner in which he delivered himself, if not an approval of all his views.

GEN. HOWARD'S ADDRESS TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.—The Front Street M. E. Church was densely crowded last night with colored people, who had congregated to listen to an address by Gen. O. O. Howard, of the Freedmen's Bureau. The General's speech was full of instruction, and if they will only act in accordance with the precepts set before them, they must necessarily advance as a race. They were urged upon to be virtuous, truthful and industrious, mindful of the obligations of the marriage contract, and polite to their former masters as well as to each other. They were informed that their freedom was acknowledged by the State Convention now in session, and that it remained with them to prove whether they were worthy to enjoy this great boon. The General did not touch on the suffrage question, but advised, as the best course to arrive at political equality, a life of labor, striving at the same time to educate and enlighten themselves and their children; that education alone would fit them to enjoy these privileges. He dwelt on this point at considerable length, endeavoring to show them the great influence exerted in society by education. He then spoke of the objects of the Bureau, of which he was Chief; that it was not intended to support them in idleness, but that it was established to assist them in transition from slavery to freedom, and that those who were purposely idle, relying upon the assistance of the Bureau would be awfully disappointed. The General also spoke of the great importance of harmony and good feeling existing between the races, and remarked that when this was effected the Bureau would be abolished. These are not all the points touched upon by the General, at the Methodist Church, but such as are here omitted will be found in the brief sketch of his remarks made at the Theatre on Saturday evening.

The Elections. An official and authorized announcement of Hon. William W. Holden for Governor appears in the Herald this morning. The people will now be called upon to approve or disapprove the reconstruction policy of President Johnson. That approval or disapproval will be manifested by the support given at the approaching election to the president's agent in this State. It is useless to deny that there are indications of opposition to Mr. Holden's election in this part of the State. That opposition if it shall manifest itself more openly, will be based upon the past political record of the gubernatorial candidate. It will be urged by those men who are not fully satisfied with the termination of the great struggle of the past four years, but are yet at heart hostile to the national government. The extent and power of this discontented and hostile class is yet to be determined. We are satisfied that it is quite insignificant; that the people of this State are, as a body, heartily loyal to the people. This fact will be illustrated at the election, when the man of the president's choice western and central portions of the State the provisional Governor will meet with no opposition. He counties to affect the result of the election. But fact will be received as an evidence of the lingering enmity of the people to the government of the United States. It is our earnest desire that no such evidence should go to the government. It is our wish that the administration at Washington should be persuaded that the protestations of loyal government by our people are not mere words. Should the integrity and fidelity of the people of North Carolina to loyal principles, the work of restoration would be virtually accomplished. But the general doubts that exist as to the admission of our members to the floor of Congress. Now let the people in the approaching election, as a matter of policy, expediency, or whatever else it may be termed, lay aside all differences. Let them ratify the acts of the convention so far as they are to be submitted; let them endorse the President's policy as executed by his agent the provisional Governor, by unanimously electing that agent Governor; let them select unconditional union men for members of Congress; let them elect a state legislature of similar stripe, and the government will have so convincing a proof of our loyalty that there can and will be no objection to our full restoration to the rights and privileges of a state of the Union.

Some men who are neither political nor personal friends to the provisional Governor tell us perhaps with a great deal of truth, that this man or that man is quite as loyal as Mr. Holden. Grant that this may be so, and what is gained? These very men who are thus urged for opposition candidates were pressed before the President for appointment as provisional Governor. But the President chose to determine that he had more confidence in Mr. Holden's loyalty than in theirs. Shall we question the President's right to so determine? And having so determined he will naturally count upon the support given to the man he has designated as the leader of the loyal sentiment of the state as an indication of the measure of our loyalty. The question is not whether somebody else, in our opinion, is more loyal than Mr. Holden. The President has his own ideas of loyalty. Other people have their ideas. But as between the two the President's will be most apt to prevail. Mr. Davis might claim that he is and has always been a loyal man, and his friends will back the claim. The President says he is a traitor and a rebel. The President's conclusion is the one that must prevail in the matter. So in the selection of our candidates now. The malcontents insist that some of the unpardoned among us are the most loyal men. They may be the most loyal from our standpoint, but from the President's standpoint they are not loyal at all, and all our assertions will not affect the matter one iota.

Therefore it is that we ask the people to submit cheerfully to the President's choice in this matter; and so hasten the day of our complete restoration, and the return of civil law and order.—Wilmington Herald.

FROM FORTRESS MONROE.—Preparations are being made to remove Mr. Clay and Mr. Mitchell from the casemates they are occupying and have occupied since their imprisonment to Carroll Hall. Each will have a room by himself and on the same floor with that occupied by Mr. Davis. It is probable the proposed change will be made within a few days. There will be no diminution in the number of the guard placed over the prisoners. At present half of the guard—the entire detail is seventy-two, besides officers—keep watch over Mr. Davis. Regard for the health and comfort of the State prisoners has alone instigated this change in their quarters. And this kindly regard in matters of food, in the allowance of daily out-door exercise, in the medical attendance they receive, in the reading privileges accorded them, and in all the varied comforts permitted them, have served to keep them all in excellent health, and in fine as well as grateful spirits.

Persons in city and country are requested, at all times, to furnish us verbal or written information of any events of public interest which may transpire in their neighborhoods, or of which they may have knowledge.

THE CEMETERY.—The condition of this city of the dead is a crying shame and subjects our corporate authorities to the most unkind criticisms from strangers and citizens. We hear that not only is the fence down which encloses the square so as to make it a common thoroughfare, but boys roam through it at will, tearing down pallings, abusing if not breaking monuments. The cows and hogs appear also to have free access to the graves of the beloved departed and unrestrained liberty to pasture and upturn the earth therein.

These things should not be permitted a moment longer than mechanical skill can remedy the evil. We tell the commissioners that their position and duty is quite as high and responsible as members of the legislature, and they can do nothing which will give them a faster hold on popular affection at home than to order at once the necessary repairs about the cemetery.

THE 120TH INDIANA REGIMENT.—We cheerfully comply with the request of a member of the above regiment to insert the following:

Raleigh, Oct. 21, 1865.

Editor Progress:—I notice in your paper this morning an item stating that the withdrawal of a part of the 28th Michigan regiment will leave the city without troops. Permit me to inform you, and through you the good people of Raleigh, that the 120th Indiana regiment is still in your midst. That you should be unconscious of our presence (while we have encamped within five minutes walk of the capitol building for more than two months) is the highest compliment you could possibly have paid to the discipline of our regiment.

Very truly yours, HOOSIER. We had no intention, whatever, of ignoring the existence or presence of the 120th when we alluded to the withdrawal of the 28th Michigan. Colonel Kise has a most excellent regiment, and the department of officers and men has been such since they have been here as to win largely upon the regard of our citizens. Indiana troops are great favorites here, and we know of no organization that has made a more favorable impression than the 120th. We learn that for the present this regiment will perform the garrison duty for this post.

PREFERRED A SIDEBOARD.—It is said that a few days since a venerable colored woman visited the freedmen's bureau in this city and demanded to be informed if it was the place where they kept the freed men's bureaus. The clerks in Col. Whittlesey's employ are extremely polite, and one of the number, who has a high relish for good jokes, replied affirmatively. The anthracite feminine thereupon approached him in a confidential manner and whispering, said: "I see come by my burro, though I prefer a sideboard, as den I can lock my wittals up from de pawper niggers who visits me, but wont arn money to buy 'wisions."

The men of pens exploded with laughter and after having had the matter fully explained to her, old Sally left for her home in Johnson county, from which place she had walked to obtain her bureau.

THE MEETING SATURDAY.—A meeting of the citizens of Raleigh was held in the court-house Saturday afternoon, where, among other things, the subjoined resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we hereby take pleasure in the expression of our unreserved confidence in President Johnson and the policy of his administration—that we regard him as the best friend of the South, not because of any sectional proclivities he may have for the South, but because he is a national man, willing and anxious to do justice to all sections of the country, and justice is all the South asks for, and that as patriotic men we feel it to be our duty to sustain him in his onerous labors in re-organizing and restoring the Union.

Resolved, That we have unabated confidence in Governor Holden, that we appreciate his efforts and his labors in behalf of the interests of the State and the people thereof; that believing he has the full and entire confidence of President Johnson, and that he is laboring in accord with the President in the effort to restore North Carolina to her position in the Union, and that we regard it as due to patriotism and to our interests to sustain him in the position he now holds, and also to support him for election as civil governor.

Capt. J. Q. DeCarteret then offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That having entire confidence in the worth, patriotism and conservatism of Col. J. P. H. Russ, we respectfully recommend him for a seat in the next Congress of the United States in this district. J. R. HARRISON, Ch'mn.

W. H. FINCH, Sec'y.
