Raleigh and Plymouth line of Stages. THIS line of Stages was established last fall, with the view of connecting the main southern with the eastern line—thereby opening a communication North and South, by way of Norfolk—a thing long desired. And the experiment has abundantly proved, that this route is capable of affording all the advantages which its warmest friends expected. The Proprietors have now enlarged their plan, and will in future run four-horse stages, and in a style suited to importance of the route. They are determined to spare neither expense nor trouble to render this line commodious to travellers. The Stage runs through from Raleigh to Plymouth in two days, resting the first night at Tarborough, and arriving at Plymouth in the afternoon of the second day, in time to take the Steam boat and reach Edenton that evening. The Edenton Stage sets out the next morning and arrives at Norfolk in the evening. Thus in three days, by easy travelling, and the nights allowed for sleep and rest, the stage performs the route from Raleigh to Norfolk—and one day more takes the passenger to Baltimore. This line is run, each way three times a week. The road is one of the best in our country—and the accommodations are very good. The lines from Fayetteville to Raleigh and from Edenton to Norfolk, are kept in excellent order and superior style.—An agreeable passage is therefore open from this State and the States south of this, to the northern and eastern States—whereby a man may travel from this, in comfort and ease, take his accustomed rest, and arrive at Baltimore sooner than he can by the upper route of stages. Good stages, horses and drivers, with an obliging attention to travellers—if an excellent road and good fare with the privilege of resting at night—if convenience and despatch are calculated to recommend a line of stages to the public, then is this entitled to public patronage. And that patronage is solicited by THE MANAGERS. 20-4t Raleigh, June 30, 1819. The Editors of the Nat. Intelligencer, Baltimore Patriot, Norfolk Herald, Charleston Times, Savannah Republican, Augusta Advertiser, and Col. Telescope, will publish the above for one month in their respective papers, and forward their accounts to John J. S. Ruffin, Treasurer for the Managers.
