We are much gratified to learn by this arrival, that the health of Com. Por-ter, which had been much impaired by unremitting attention to the duties of his appointment, was rapidly improving, and a short time, it was hoped, would find him entirely reinstated. We are no less pleased to hear, that his devution to duty, & continued exertions to promote the comfort and happiness of the officers and men under his orders, so far as was compatible with a faithful discharge of their duties, had met with a suitable appreciation, in rendering him the object of their sincere respect and confidence. Such intelligence must be received with satisfaction by our countrymen generally.
