Mr. CLAY, in his speech at the Lexington dinner, stated that he was informed, that when his nomination to the office of Secretary of State was voted upon in the Senate, "Gen. Jackson and every other Senator present was silent as to the imputation [of corruption] now made, no one presuming to question my honor or integrity."

The letters of Gen. Jackson and Mr. Buchanan, relative to the proposition said to have been made by Mr. Clay or his friends to the General upon the subject of the Presidential election, have afforded a large field for the animadversions of all the active politicians of the two contending parties.

One important deduction is, that Mr. Buchanan's letter clearly exonerates Mr. Clay and his friends from the charge of authorizing any proposition to General Jackson on the subject of the Presidential election.

Now, we would ask, can any candid and impartial reader, after examining this testimony of Mr. Buchanan, say that it carries no conviction to the mind of the truth of the charge, and that it does not go to sustain Gen. Jackson in the inference which he drew? It goes farther; it establishes the fact, that the office of the Secretary of State had, in effect, been promised to Mr. Clay, conditionally; for, says Mr. Markley, some of the friends of Mr. Adams had already been holding out the idea, that in case he were elected, Mr. Clay might probably be offered the situation of Secretary of State.
