not been, or shortly will be productive so as to answer the intentions of the legislature. This infliction, already stamped with importance, having the great cause of humanity for its object, might do honour to this and the neighbouring states, had it a proper support, where our youth might be instructed in true religion, sound policy, and science, and men of abilities drawn forth to fill the different departments of government with reputation, or be formed for useful and ornamental members of society in private or professional life. To your further patronage, permit me to recommend this infant establishment, which, without your fostering care, must fall, or rise into consequence—that a loan be granted from the treasury, on the security of the present funds, as well as future to be established, to the commissioners, to enable them to proceed in erecting the buildings, and thereby give it a more essential than a paper being.

The present route of the public post through the state, has long been considered a grievance to that part of it where population more generally obtains, in being confined to the seaboard towns, where only a few inhabitants derive advantages from that establishment in comparison to the great bulk of the people of the interior country deprived of them, where, was it permitted to pass, the post office no doubt would be more amply supported, and a long circuitous route much shortened to the southern states, by which the government would be also benefited with much speedier intelligence, and the same diffused among our citizens with despatch, so necessary in our present federal situation. Had the middle part of the state been indulged with cross-posts, to the present post stages, the inconvenience of this establishment would not have been so severely felt; but even this hath never been granted. Permit me, therefore, to urge your interposition in this business, that our senators in Congress receive your instructions to use their endeavours in effecting the regulation of the post route through the state in such way and manner most suitable to your sense and wish.

The above are the principal objects I have thought proper to lay before you; the registry-book of public letters, and the journals of the council of state are presented for your perusal and further information, and whatever I shall deem worthy of your attention in the course of the session, the same shall be communicated by message.

ALEXANDER MARTIN.
