To a L A D Y.

GO to her bands, and in the softest drefs
That ever love put on—appear;
Soft, as that touch, which thou wilt meet with there.

If she looks on thee, as she can't do less,
Shine with the lustre borrow'd from her eyes—
Live in those rays by which her STREPHON dies.

Let ev'ry line the wretched cause repeat;
Tell her—Yet stay!—One minute longer stay!—
Tell her—I dare not tell thee what to say:—

Not ev'n the fury of poetic heat,
Nor the fierce flames of love,

Perhaps may move
CLARISSA to forgive.

Oh! how happy then am I!

Who must by silence die,

And cannot!—dare not! by confession—live!

A N E C D O T E.

THE following instance of the influence of a good and great man, will, we presume, be acceptable to every reader who loves his country, and venerates its DARLING HERO!—In the late federal Convention, it had been for a long time debated, what should be the ratio of representation, and it was carried by a very considerable majority, to make it one for every forty thousand inhabitants. In this form the matter was sent to the press; but when the subject came for the last time under the consideration of the convention, General WASHINGTON rose, and spoke to the following effect:—“ Though I am sensible of the impropriety of your chairman's intermingling in your debates, yet I cannot help observing, that the small number which constitutes the representative body, appears to be a defect in your plan. It would better suit my ideas, and I believe it would be more grateful to the wishes of the people, if that number was increased.” The question was immediately put without debate, upon a motion that the ratio be one for every thirty thousand (as it now stands) and it was unanimously carried. Such was the magic force of this patriot's opinion! and it adds to the lustre of his virtues, that this critical interference (which we are well assured was all the share he had in the business of the convention) tended to promote the interest and dignity of the people.
