Court of Requests. Dobbs v. Snickerton .- In this case Mr. Charles Hugh Snickerton, appeared before the Commissioners upon summons, to explain why he had refused to pay the sum of one shilling and ninepence, alleged to be owing and due by and from the said Charles Hugh Snickerton to Mary Dobbs,

Mary Dobbs having been doly sworn-"Now Mary Dobbs," said the Chief Commissioner, elet us know-" "I beg pardon, your worships," said Mary Dobbs Tam usually called Miss Dol. s."

"Pooh, nonsense, woman!" said the Chief Com-

"No nonsense, if your wors in pleases," said Mary

"But it is nonsense," said the Chief Commissioner for if I were to call you Miss I should miscall you. Why you must be at least fifty years old?"

"That, may it please your worship, is quite irreverent to the question," said Mary Dobbs-at the same time curling her under lip, and looking down her nose as if to see whether the lip was sufficiently curled for the due reproof of the Chief Commissioner. "Well," said the Chief Commissioner, "let you name and age be what they may, will you be kind enough to let us know how Mr. Charles Hugh Snickerton got into your debt?" "By the perushal of puppylar nuvvles," replied court, stuck his thumbs into the arm-holes of his vellow-waistcoat, and went regularly into his defence thus:- "Miss Mary Dobbs and me has been acquaintances time out of mind, you'll please to understand. Very good. So whenever I goes by she's liberhary, in Seven-dials, I looks in with a 'How d'ye do, Miss Dobbs?' And says she to me, says she, 'Pretty well, thank you Mr. Son kerton; how do you do! -Just so. Very good. Well- stay let me see, where was 1?-Oh! and so went on, day by day; and sometimes of an evening I'd drop in, and take a dish of chatter-water with Miss Dobbs."

The Chief Commissioner seemed to be puzzled; and looked inquiringly at Mir Charles Hugh Snick-

The Chief Commissioner here inquired of Mr. Snickerton what he meant w chatter-water? Mr. Snickerton explained that he meant tea; and he then resumed his defence.

"Well-let me see, where was I?-Oh, about the tea-for I'm desperate partal to a dish of tea, you'll please to understand and, though I say it, Miss Dobbs makes as nice a dish of te us any lady going. So with that there was a good and falk between me and she of course; and more than once, twice or thrice she said I was particular welcome to the perushal of any of the pop'lar novels on she's shelves. And with that I took up a foo of 'em sometimes one, and sometimes another-for I'm desperate given to reading the best of every thing you'll please to understand; which I always returned 'em dooly and trooly, as clean as a pink-leastways as clean as I had 'em from she So you know, upon this, I thinks to myself thinks me-for I am a bachelor you'll please to understand, leastways I'm a widower, which is all as one in a regular point of voo, for any thing of that; and thinks I to myself thinks me-the books are quite in the family way, and it'll all come right by and bye. But howsomever I was mistaken in respect of all that there, for so it happened-you'll please to understand-that I was called down to Dartford, in Kent, so short I had'nt time to say good bye to Miss Dobbs; which I stayed there three weeks. and when I came back, Mrs. Trumbler, my landlady, says to me, says she, 'What do you think?' says she, 'Nay,' says I to she, 'I don't know what to think;' and with that she would'nt tell me; but I"

Here the Court began to manifest signs of impatience, which Mr. Snickerton perceiving, cut short siness as the deceased herself." his defence. "Why, then, the long and short of it is," said he, "that Miss Dobbs said to every body, says she, 'Snickerton's a sneak!' and with that, in my hurry, I happened to say, 'Molly Dobbs is a devil!' And that's why I'm pulled up here this day to pay for the perushal of books wot I thought was lent to me for love-and so I verily believe they was."

"Upon my honor and ferocity, gentlemen, it was no such thing!" said Miss Dobbs. And the Court ordered Mr. Snickerton to pay the debt instanter upon pain of imprisonment. Advantages of Wars .- Notwithstanding the hundreds of battles which have been fought, the hundreds of thousands of lives which have been lost, and the hundred millions of treasure which have been squandered away in the contests between France and sold, can be redeemed at any time within Great Britain, it would be difficult to point out any two years, by paying into the Treasury douimportant advantage which either party has gained, ble the amount of the money for which they to compensate for the loss of all this blood and wealth. Their relative position is exactly the same that it was three hundred years ago. They have alternately lost and gained a few colonies scarcely worth retaining, and which have, indeed, generally been restored as time the youngest of said heirs shall bethe price of peace; but no permanent advantage has been obtained by either party. Their power is so well balanced, that neither of them can ever hope to gain the ascendancy, though they may reduce, repeatedly have reduced each other to the verge of ruin. It is rather singular, that even in the last war, the French and the English, in spite of all their victories, were the two powers who gained the least the Russians, Prussians, and Austrians, all came out of the struggle with an accession of territory-while the French lost all that they had previously obtained, and the English added five hundred millions to the national debt .- Liv. Times.

We have heard a story of a countryman, who had made up his mind to "shuffle off this mortal coil;" and only waited till he had settled in his mind the most comfortable way of dying. Not being able readily to agree with himself on this important point, he informed a neighbour of his, whom he met with an axe on his shoulder, that he was resolved upon death, and would take it as a great favor if he would assist him in the accomplishment of his purpose. His neighbour being willing to humour the candidate for a change of worlds, told him that he was just going

"I'm very much obliged to you," said the weary of the world, "and shall consider myself bound to you for life. I'll go and be killed directly."

Accordingly he followed the exeman to the woods. A tall tree was chosen and he was directed where to stand, so as to receive the full force of its fall. He fixed himself on the spot, folded his arms, and prepared to wait the event. The chopper began to lay on with vigorous blows, while the death's candidate kept his eye upon the top of the tree, to see when it would fall. He stood very composed for a while but at length began to appear uneasy, and not per feetly satisfied with his prospects. And while the axeman seemed to him to redouble his blows, he kept winking and winking, he thought he perceived the tree begin to nod, and that the next moment would be his last. The cold sweat began to issue from his skin, his limbs trembled-he could stand i no longer! He took to flight and never looked be hind him until he had got at least forty rods, when he ventured to stop. He was pursued by the axeman, who on coming up, asked him why he ran a

"Oh," said he, "I was afraid if I staid there hould be killed."

"I thought," returned the chopper, "you came on purpose to be killed." "Ah, true," replied the man with great simplicit but I forgot that. O how I tremble! If I'd stail

Stage was stopping this morning to deliver a passenger opposite Orange Place, the horses took fright, and ran with great fury down Washington street; they did not stop until they were thrown upon the pavement near the north-west corner of Faneuil Hall females, who were all taken out uninjured, although greatly alarmed. The horses ran more than a mile; the streets were thronged with foot passengers, and the stage was driven frequently on the side walk; it came are happy to learn that there was no damage done to life or limb. An eye-witness informs us that the horror of the spectators, as the stage dashed by them, was immediately converted into unceremonious laughter, at hearing one of the lady passengers, as she descended from the coach ask immediately for her bandbox.—Boston Transcript.

FROM THE CHEROKEE PHENIX.

Many of the people of the United States, who think with Mr. Forsyth that the Cherokees are poor them there are several societies for the spread of religion and morality, and what is still more astonishing, the chiefs of these people, "who grind the faces of the poor" and "keep them under, in poverty and ignorance," that "their avaricious propensity may be gratified," generally take the lead and support them by their example and contributions. They have Missionary societies, Tract Societies, Sunday School Societies, Berevolent Societies, Book Societies and Temperance Societies. It was only the other day we had the pleasure of being present at the formawe insert below. We wish success to every effort intended for the spread of true religion in this nation. We hope the people will feel the importance of doing something for themselves. Let us show the world that we are not so degraded as to prove the truth of Mr. Forsyth's contemptuous words: or if we are, we will manifest a strong desire to arise from such a degradation. Such a desire we found was apparent, among the people at the formation of the Society of which we are speaking. They gave their Passion .- What is more unpleasant, and what so much derogates from the character of an amiable, beautiful, or accomplished woman as to behold her in a passion?-For a young lady to become enraged at the misdemeanor of a servant-or because her milliner failed in executing her commands in proper season-or that her dress did not precisely suit her taste-or from any other trifling motive; at once discovers the want of amiability, as well as of sufficient strength of mind, to suppress her temper. Such a one would never be selected as the partner of a sensible man-such could never kindle exalted admiration, true respect, or genuine love. Norfolk, October 26. IMPORTANT NEWS FROM EUROPE.

We have again the satisfaction of acknowledging the receipt, by the fast sailing regular trader James Cropper, Capt. George C. Gary, of very late and (what in the present posture of Continental affairs, cannot fail to be) important intelligence from the scenes of Revolution in Europe.

Capt. G. sailed from Liverpool on the 14th Sept. and with his usual friendly and polite attention, has furnished us with a series London papers to the 13th and Liverpool to the 14th inclusive, the last dates being six days in advance of our advices by the feet ships of the New York lines.

These papers (which cast our comparatively diminutive sheet into a deep shade embrace details of immense volume and no little interest, touching the revolutionary drama which is now being presented on the continent of Europe, the denouement of which from the present foreground, must be most portentous to those gigantic powers who have heretofore given a tone and direction to the affairs of our trans-Atlantic brethren. Nor can we be indifferent spectators of those events. We must learn with satisfaction, that England, Austria, Prussia, the King of Stage Incident .- As the Medway Accommodation the Netherlands, and the King of Wurtemburg, have recognised the legitimate rule of the people's King in France, by renewing the credentials of their ambassadors at his Court, that a similar sanction is momently There were six passengers in the stage, two of them looked for from Russia, and that the Kings of Spain and Naples, who, from their near affinity to the deposed monarch, would naturally make them the most reluctant to the in contact with a wagon opposite Boylston Market, measure, would find powerful considera-"Not a bit of it," said Mr. Snickerton, and having and dashed it to pieces; it upset a chaise opposite tions not to deliberate too long, as to the OST a few days ago between Fayetteville and Hardware and Cutlery, Hats, Shoes, so said, he laid his hat down upon the floor of the Avon Place, but fortunately no one was in it. We course which circumstances must eventual ly force them.

> But, notwithstanding the tolerant spirit in which the new order of things in France seems to be regarded by many of the neighboring sovereignties, the papers assure us, that there is not so much cause for sitisfaction in the temper and tendencies of domestic parties. Many enlightened Frenchmen. it is said, have expressed and continue to devils, may perhaps be surprised to learn that among express, great uneasiness as to the course which French politics appear to be taking Most of the liberal Journals, (say the latest English dates) and all the ardent part of the population, express great distrust in the present Chamber of Deputies, and are very clamorous for a new election. It is support sed that the disaffected would desire to re der the Covernment stall more org still to weaken the Executive power, by urgtion of a Missionary Society, the constitution of which ing upon the Chamber the abolition of the Peerage, As an evidence that this is really a prevalent doctrine, a quotation (for which we have not room to day) is given from the Journal des Debuts of 10th Sept .- a paper which was zealous and warm in its applause of the late glorious revolution.

The Revolution in the Netherlands .- The spirit of hostility to the existing dynasty hourly increased .- The separation of Holland and Belgium was the rallying cry .-The interesting details, from the Brussels papers under date of 9th and 10th Sept. occupy many columns-they contain animatinfant children. > The affairs of the Netherlands (says the Liverpool Times of 14th) are as much embroiled as ever. The Belgians insist on a dissolution of the Union with Holland, and a separate legislature, and demand that the only bond of connection shall be a common King. The King has issued a conciliatory proclamation, promising the redress of all real grievances, but it is doubtful whether this will produce any effect. The people appear determined to have a separation, and as the army is very much divided, being composed of about equal proportions of Dutch and Belgians, it will scarcely be in the power of the King to prevent it, though by timely concessions he may preserve the Royal authority of his own fami-

Yesterday, (says the London Times of Sept. 11th) we received the Paris papers of Wednesday, which contain articles confirmatory of the pacific intentions of the Emperor of Russia towards the new Government of France. Austria and Prussia .- The Times announces the important fact of the actual recognition of Louis Phillippe, King of the French, by the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia. The recognition by both these powers was on its way to Paris via Berlin. Count Lobau, the new French Minister, has been most graciously received by the King of
