TYPICAL HOUSEKEEPING AID PROJECT BY WPA

Typical of the housekeeping aid project, sponsored by the Works Progress Administration, are these scenes taken in a Harlem tenement home of a relief client. The top picture shows the housekeeping aide tending the children while the mother is resting from illness. In the lower picture is a view of the aide doing the family laundry in the home. She is also prepared to serve in other household duties. At regular meetings with physicians, visiting nurses and welfare workers, the aide is guided in the health phases of her work, thereby increasing her ability to be of greater service. In thirty-nine states 14,400 women have served 500,000 families as housekeeping aides. Many of these WPA workers have reached a high level of fitness in their work and are finding their way into private employment.— WPA Photos.

Many people have found out that it didn't pay to wait until the roof leaked. They waited and waited—not knowing that rains were rotting the roof timbers by getting through the roof. Although they could see no leaks, the rain was seeping slowly down the rafters and every rain brought the danger point closer to the ceiling life. Then one day a heavy rain came and before anything could be done, some plaster fell and a rug and chair were ruined. It cost money to repair this damage. A new roof put on in time would have saved that money.

If your roof is old and weather-beaten now, you may be sure that it will leak sooner or later. But you can avoid that extra expense by having us inspect your roof now, free. Without obligation, we will tell you exactly what condition your roof is in. Phone us now for free roof inspection.
