WIN "HIGHEST HONORS" FOR SECOND TIME IN NEW YORK

—DOLORES and BERNICE CALVIN—The New York Times on Sunday, June 5, mentioned 4 youthful pianists out of 500 who played in the National Piano Playing Tournament at the Biltmore Hotel, 42d street and Madison avenue, as having won "superior" rating, been given a gold star each, and their names placed on the National Honor Roll, and two of these were sisters, Bernice and Dolores Calvin, 13 and 10 years old, who achieved this honor for the second time. The young pianist composers 2 weeks ago gave their very successful second New York recital in which they were supported by a large number of nationally known teachers. The judges of the tournament (all white) were outstanding pianists and teachers of music, and the sisters were given an hour and a half to demonstrate their talent, the judges being concealed behind a screen and not seeing them until after the test. To attain the National Honor Roll and receive a gold star a contestant is required to play from memory twenty compositions by classical, romantic and modern composers. Bernice and Dolores each added compositions of their own to their repertoire, and Bernice was singled out as having done remarkable work under Miss Ruth Wolf of the New York School of Music and art and Dolores was praised as doing exceptionally fine work under her sister. Mrs. M. Allison director of the tournament, kept the young artists after their audition to play for special guests. In addition to her music, Bernice is a senior in Senior High school and Dolores enters Senior High School in September.

TRUE STORIES PROGRESS THROUGH CHEMISTRY

By Dr. Jas. K. Hunt, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc.

Cellulose as a Chemical Raw Material

MUCH of the progress made in recent years toward better living is due to the chemist. Starting with raw materials found in nature, he has created hundreds of new products for our health, comfort, and happiness. Working in the twilight realm of atoms and molecules, the chemist has found that cellulose is a fruitful raw material for making a wide variety of beautiful and useful new products. A conservative estimate is that this widely distributed material is at present put to more than 10,000 uses.

Ground Alkali Cellulose

Cellulose is one of the most plentiful of nature's raw materials. Millions of tons of it are produced each year as the fibers or framework of practically all plants. Cotton "linters," the short "fluff" left on the seed after the longer fibers have been removed by ginning, and trees such as the spruce and fir, are the principal sources of cellulose used for chemical purposes. It is estimated that the United States uses each year approximately 180,000,000 pounds of cotton linters and more than 200,000,000 pounds of wood pulp.

Among the more important products based on cellulose are rayon and transparent cellulose film, which together required the cotton linters and wood pulp from an estimated 6,000,000 acres of land in 1934.

When cellulose is treated with a mixture of nitric and sulfuric acids, a product known as nitrocellulose or pyroxylin is formed, which is the basis for quick-drying lacquers, motion picture film, sporting powder, and the pyroxylin plastics which are put to myriad uses—from soufflé heads for women's shoes to test-tube handles.

Treated with acetic acid, cotton linters give us another important cellulose derivative used in making acetate rayon, safety X-ray film, airplane window shades, fountain pens and lamp shades. Take a look at your automobile. The safety glass is made safe

Everyday Cooking Miracles

BY VIRGINIA FRANCIS Director, Hotpoint Electric Cookery Institute

"How about a snack?" That's the kind of greeting we like to hear after a long afternoon of Christmas shopping—especially if it's a snack that's new and different, like "chickenburgers." As you have probably already guessed, they are made with leftover chicken—and so simply and below where it can't possibly smoke or catch fire. You will want to keep this recipe in mind for the after-holiday season, when turkey bones still have a few pickings left on them. In fact, left-over veal or pork may also be broiled as "burgers" in just this way also.

Something new and different are these "Chickenburgers," easily and quickly made in the broiler of your electric range.

These chickenburgers are a versatile dish, too, for they go equally well as the entree of a Sunday supper or luncheon and as a "snack" disguised like its more lowly relative, the hamburger.

But the most unusual thing about these chickenburgers is that they are broiled, now one of the quickest, cleanest methods of cooking since the development of the new Hotpoint smokeless broiler. And after the process is completed there is no smoke or odor to tell the tale because the broiler is designed with wide bars and narrow openings so that the fat which cooks out of the meat during broiling is collected in a protected portion of the pan
