THE FIRST PARTY
 A young friend of mine came to me the other day all agog. She is going to her first big party and, to make it even more exciting, she is going with an "older" boy. His finished school and has his first job. But the thrill and excitement is a bit overshadowed by the fear that she might not measure up—that she might seem too young and unsophisticated and awkward. What must she do? Mentally she is counting how many boys she will know there and of that number how many will dance with her. She is figuring out what all the other girls will wear and is panicky lest they outshine her. No slight reassurances will do. She wants a well-ordered routine of how she must look and act from the time she starts dressing until she says goodnight. And since, with the Christmas holidays coming on, many of you are in the same predicament, thought you might be interested in the advice I gave her.

Youthful Looking Dress Most Appropriate
 First of all, if you are going to get a new dress, don't try to get the most sophisticated-type dress possible. There is nothing more absurd than a sixteen-year-old would-be siren. There are many dresses in the shops that are neither little-girl nor woman-of-the-world. Bear in mind that your youth is half your charm, hard though it may be for you to believe now. Dress your age, neither several years younger, nor ten years older. Select a shade that is becoming to you—white and the pale pastels are most becoming to younger skins. When you get older you will have to watch the shades that bring out your better features and do not emphasize the lines and shadows in your face. Now is the time to wear all the colors of the rainbow with a clear conscience.

Make-Up Should Be Natural
 And when you have decided on the color and style and selected your dress, give serious thought to your cosmetics. Your skin is young and clear enough to have a definite beauty of its own. Don't try to hide it under a mask of make-up. Choose a powder that matches your skin tone and use it lightly to bring out the beauty of your skin, not as a means of hiding your natural coloring. Find a rouge and lipstick that blend with your skin tone and use these sparingly as well. The excitement of the occasion will give you a natural glow. Remember, in your effort to be sophisticated, that the most charming women apply their make-up so carefully that it is difficult to detect. The secret lies in selecting the proper shades and applying them carefully and sparingly.

And don't forget your deodorant. If you do, the unaccustomed excitement might wreak havoc to your personal charm and your brand new dress. It only takes a few minutes and is something that no fastidious woman of any age can afford to overlook.

Be sure, too, that your hair is immaculately clean and well-groomed. Clean, shining hair is becoming in almost any style it is worn. Wash it or have it washed either the day of the party or several days in advance of the party according to your particular requirements.

This just a rough draft of some of the external. In my next column I'll give you some hints which I hope will add to your peace and peace of mind. In the meantime, if you have any particular questions, let me know.

What are your beauty problems? Write Marie Downing, Larieuse Beauty Foundation, Room 321—319 North Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., and she will be glad to answer them. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.
