TIMELY FARM QUESTIONS

QUESTION: — Do honeybees puncture the skin of grapes, peaches, and other fruit?

ANSWER: The answer is no, according to W. A. Stephen, extension beekeeper at State College. Stephen says the design of the month parts of bees makes it impossible for them to do this. They will suck the juice of fruits but only after the fruit skin has already been injured in some way. Normally bees will not even bother with this juice at all if nectar is available, but often during the time when fruits are ripening there are very few flowers in bloom in which the bees can work. For experimental purposes, bees have been placed in cages with healthy whole fruit and as a result died of starvation.

QUESTION: — What crop rotation is best to reduce root knot in tobacco land?

ANSWER: — H. R. Garris, extension plant pathologist at State College, says that crop resistant to root knot and suitable in rotations to reduce the incidence of the disease include oats, rye, wheat, crotalaria, peanuts, red top grass, and many native weeds. Cotton or corn can be used in a three-year rotation provided these crops do not immediately precede tobacco. Following are some sample three-year rotations which have given good root knot control in

GOOD PRACTICES INCREASE YIELDS

J. B. JONES, Negro farmer of Route 1, Bahama, has done a good job of bunding up his soil and improving crop yields on his farm, according to J. Frank Doggett, soil conservationist for the State College Extension Service.

Before he started work with the soil conservationist and other agricultural agencies, the Durham County farmer was making about four or five barrels of corn per acre. Now he averages 15 to 20 barrels per acre. His gain yields have been increased in the same proportion.

About 10 years ago Jones began terracing all open fields on his farm. Since that time he has worked constantly to keep his terraces in good condition.

He was one of the first farmers to begin cooperating with the soil conservation program when it was started in the county in 1941. In cooperation with J. C. Jester, soil conservationist, Jones made a complete plan for his farm and has followed it as closely as possible.

He has planted covers crops, legumes, and pastures. He now has a nine-acre pasture demonstration which is providing grazing for several cows. All of his row crops are cultivated on the contour to help conserve the soil.

BLOAT DESCRIBED AS MAJOR DISEASE

A new six-page folder on "Bloat in Cattle and Sheep" has just been published by the State College Extension Service and copies are available on request.

The publication was prepared by Dr. C. D. Grinnells, professor of veterinary science for the Agricultural Experiment Station, who describes bloat as "a disease of major economic importance."

"More reports than usual of bloat and fatalities from it have been received this year," Doctor Grinnells says. "An increase in our cattle population and legume acreage will bring this condition to our attention especially when weather conditions are conducive to rapid growth of legumes."

Symptoms of bloat include prominent swelling in the left flank, uneasiness or nervousness, rapid ballooning of the left flank, swelling which rebounds and give a dull sound when thumped, cessation of end chewing, labored breathing, moaning, and dilated nostrils.

Dr. Grinnells lists the following preventive measures: Feed dry roughage or grass pastures before placing animals on rich legume pasture; use cottonseed hulls and corn silage to prevent alfalfa bloat; mix grasses with legumes so they make up 50 per cent of the mixture; allow alfalfa to mature before grazing; closely supervise animals when moving them to new grazing areas; do not turn hungry cattle on legumes in the pre-bloom stage.

"Management is important in reducing the amount of bloat and in reducing losses in cases that do occur," the State College professor asserts. He points out that many stockmen have gone for years without a case of bloat.

Suggestions for home treatment are also given in the publication, copies of which may be obtained free from the local county agent or by writing the Agricultural Editor, State College Station, Raleigh, and asking for Extension Folder No. 77.

HINTS TO HOMEMAKERS

Musty basement odors, common in wet weather, may be whisked away with a spray of weak formaldehyde solution. For a flourishing "crop" of mold in the basement, a pound of formaldehyde should be used to 1 1/4 gallons of water. The garden spray, pump or sprinkling can may be used. If there are musty odors only, a weaker solution may suffice. A small amount may be used in water for wall washing or floor scrubbing, for instance.

Smelly garbage cans, sinks, pantries, and attics also can be deodorized with the formaldehyde solution. The chemical can be purchased at drug stores, and at seed stores in certain sections of the country where it is used as a space disinfectant.

The seed treated with formaldehyde should be thoroughly aired before occupancy. Rubber gloves should be worn if the hands are to come in contact with the solution, to avoid skin irritation. Spills on the skin should be washed off at once. Used in dilute solution, however, the chemical does not injure textiles, household utensils, etc. Do follow directions.

If your silver needs polishing, here's a way you can make your own silver polish. Dissolve four tablespoons of neutral soap flakes in one pint of hot water. Then stir in one-fourth pound of whiting and two teaspoons of ammonia.

Store this polish in labeled jars with tight covers. To use, apply it to the silver with a soft cloth, allow it to dry and then rub off with a clean cloth. Af-general welfare."

As great and unforeseen changes have modified our country and the relation of its people to each other in a thousand ways since the writing of the Constitution it has been natural and inevitable that the relation of the government to its people has also been modified greatly. Yet it is interesting to note that the Founding Fathers recognized as one of the important functions of the government from the beginning, along with insuring "domestic tranquility" and providing for the "common defense," the promotion of the general welfare. The only difference today is that the promotion of the general welfare is a tremendously bigger and more complicated task in 1949 than it was in 1789, and that much which was formerly taken care of on a local or state basis must be done by the national government, if at all.

Many of those who decry the welfare state, and their fathers and grandfathers, received great benefits from the federal government which promoted their own welfare, if not that of the people generally. They enjoyed, some of them, the benefits of slave labor and the traffic in human beings under the protection of the government. Others received huge grants of farm, timber and mineral lands in connection with the expansion of the railroads. Ocean shipping and commercial flying, to give only a few examples, have been subsidized by federal government. President Hoover tried to sooth the depression by having the government lend large sums to business.

None of these could have been granted on the basis of assisting the already rich and powerful to become more rich and powerful; the justification in every case was the promotion of the general welfare by helping the few, on the theory that indirectly the benefits, or some of them, would trickle down to the many. No objections were raised by the rich and powerful to such implementation if the general welfare; they sought and demanded it. It is only when the federal government has adopted more direct measures of providing for the general welfare that the "welfare state" begins to be viewed with alarm.
