TIMELY FARM QUESTIONS

Question: What treatment is recommended when an outbreak of blackhead disease occurs in turkeys?

Answer: First of all, says L. W. Hergick, extension turkey specialist at State College, the producer should remove all droopy birds from the flock. Then he should treat the flock to remove cecal worms, using two pounds of phenothiazine per 100 pounds of mash. Immediately after this treatment, the turkeys should be moved to a clean area on the range, and they should be moved twice a week until a week or two after the losses have stopped. Herrick points out that phenothiazine is not recommended as a routine treatment when the flock does not have blackhead.

QUESTION: — When was blank shank first discovered in North Carolina?

ANSWER: — The first trace of the disease in North Carolina was found in the western part of the State in 1931. For six years it was localized in that area. In 1937, however, it appeared 200 miles to the east, in Pitt County. Gradually spreading since then, it has taken on epidemic proportions in the last two or three years. Blank shank is now found in nearly all of the 62 flue-cured tobacco-producing counties in the State. Eleven eastern counties had from two to four times as many fields infested in 1948 as in 1947. At least five counties are so badly infested that it is advisable to grow only varieties resistant to blank shank. These counties are Forsyth, Stokes, Rockingham, Pitt, and Greene.

QUESTION: — Is any work being done to develop a hybrid variety of tobacco?

ANSWER: — Development of hybrid corn has been one of the major farm improvements of this century. Now scientists say that hybrid tobacco is a distinct possibility and that hybridization will almost certainly figure in the future of the flue-cured tobacco industry. Plant breeders in India, Russia, the Philippines, and France have done work on development of tobacco hybrids, and considerable work also has been done in the United States. Yield increases as high as 58 per cent have been reported. Work was begun at the North Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station in 1947 when seven varieties were selected for crossing. The project is still in progress.

JAS. R. STONE, Assistant Clerk of the Superior Court, Durham County. C. J. GATES, Attorney.

suits have been promising, but it probably will be some time before any hybrid variety is developed to the point where it will be ready for general use.

WARREN FIELD DAY ATTRACTS OVER 300

More than 300 Negro farmers of Warren County attended a farm improvement and pasture seeding field day held recently on the farm of R. T. Harrison, Route 1, Norlina, reports C. S. Wynn, Negro county agent for the State College Extension Service.

Five tractors and tillage machines, provided by local farm implement dealers, were used in preparing a six-acre tract of land for seeding of Ladino clover-fescue and Ludino orchard grass mixtures. Machinery also was used in throwing up terraces in a field of tobacco land.

The day's program also included painting of Harrison's dairy barn and underpinning of his dwelling house with native stone. Other projects, including landscape gardening, poultry culling, treatment of peach trees for borer control, and orchard pruning, had been planned but were called off because of rain in the afternoon.

The visiting farmers showed much interest in the demonstrations, particularly pasture seeding, and many said they planned to follow similar practices on their own farms.

Harrison owns 30 acres of land, grows tobacco and cotton as cash crops, and is one of two Negro farmers in the county who operate Grade A dairies. He milks 15 cows and has four yearlings and two bulls. His daily milk production now runs about 25 to 27 gallons, and his milk checks total from $400 to $500 every month.

Harrison started his Grade A barn as a tobacco pack-house, but County Agent Wynn convinced him to convert it into a dairy barn even before he finished constructing it. He had been selling Grade B milk prior to that time. The investment in Grade A facilities has paid him well, he says.

The Warren farmer plans to continue growing cash crops, he says he will take second place in his program once he gets enough pasture acreage seeded.

HINTS TO HOMEMAKERS

Light and heat both weaken curtains and draperies, often causing them to break through or go to pieces. Some fabrics are affected more than others, and homemakers naturally want to know which fabrics will stand up longest against sunlight or heat from radiator or register.

A study just completed by the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, indicates that the most durable materials for curtains and draperies are acetate rayon and glass fabric — a comparatively new fabric woven of tiny glass rods. These were found most resistant to both light and heat. Silk, nylon and plastics were the fabrics most weakened by light; and linen and nylon by heat.

Twenty-seven different materials suitable for curtains or draperies were studied in the tests, explains Dr. Hazel M. Fletcher, textile physicist for the Bureau, who did the research. Various weaves of undyed cotton, linen, silk, wool, acetate rayon, viscose rayon, and nylon were tested, as well as one glass fabric and five different plastic materials — familiar for their use in show curtains.

The fabrics were woven into such materials as marquisette, gauze, crash, and taffeta. But, adds Dr. Fletcher, the way fabrics stand up under light and heat depends on the fiber used, not the way it is woven.

In the tests, plastic film — plastic material made without oven background — became of a woven background — became stronger when exposed to heat, but became stiff at the same time. The acetate and glass fabrics which withstood heat and light well exhibited another desirable feature by retaining their whiteness better than the other materials. The only glass fabric tested was white. This material is often not satisfactory in colors because the color fades in laundering or dry cleaning, says the physicist.

Lincoln Univ. (Pa.) Begins 96th Year

Lincoln University in Chester County, Pa., America's oldest college for Colored Americans, began its ninety-sixth year today with a welcome address by the President, Dr. Horace Mann Bond in the School's Memorial Chapel. Speaking to a student body of 450 students, Dr. Bond called attention to the great traditions surrounding Lincoln University, pointing out that while the school was founded to provide leadership for persons of African descent, there never has been any barrier of race or creed to admission at Lincoln.

A slight decrease in enrollment was experienced this year. In lieu with dwindling G. I. applicants, although the freshman class numbers 125 students.
