REPLICA OF MIAMI DEFEAT STAGED BEFORE 18,000 FANS AT GRIFFITH STADIUM IN D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The North Carolina College Eagles went down to a most ignominious defeat here last Sat., night by a score of 47-0 at the hands of the hard charging and accurate passing of the Va. State Trojans.

The game, the 6th annual national classic, was played at Griffith Stadium before nearly 18,000 fans. It was somewhat of a replica of the never-to-be-forgotten ill fated Miami drubbing which the Eagles suffered in the Orange Bowl last December, when they were defeated by the Florida A. and M. Rattlers by a score of 67-6.

The North Carolina alumni, friends and supporters of the Eagles who had traveled from distant points all over the country to see their team, were humiliated, embarrassed and made sad of heart as they watched Lawrence Emanuel, Leo Miles and Clinton Freeman alternate to fill the air with passes, one of which was over 60 yards for a touchdown. The Eagles showed little prowess on the offensive and only once did they penetrate to the 26 yard line of their opponents, and this was against the second and third stringers of the Trojans.

In the department of line defense, the Eagles plainly showed that they had been coached up to CIAA standard, as the Trojans were unable to make many gains in that area. However, the North Carolina College eleven's passing defense was one of the poorest ever seen in an Eagle aggregation. At times, passes seemed to go through the arms of Eagle defenders into the waiting hands of Trojan receivers. Not only did the Eagles show little or no passing defensive, but on the offensive several of their attempted passes were intercepted. In all, the Eagles attempted 25 passes and completed four while the Trojans attempted 20 and completed nine, six of which went for touchdowns.

we concentrate on laying hold of his creative side and working with it in developing an alternative activity. The same approach is emerging slowly today in criminal law and in all sorts of personal relations. There's hope for us, real hope. We're getting the feel of this alternative to negative violence on the one hand and cowardly appeasement on the other. And one day the majority governments of the world will have it too, and they will have graduated to more mature kinds of communication with one another. But they will not have it unless we who see it today, we to whom much is given and thus much expected, take action now! The majority-rule states are a disciplinary problem, and we have a two-fold job: On the one hand to withhold our support, to limit our citizenship to that which we can conscientiously participate in; and on the other hand to build into the structure and spirit of our lives a living testimony to the alternative which we feel emerging within and which we have the opportunity and privilege to make manifest, among...kindred spirits.

This 16th day of October, 1952.

(Continued from Page Six) needed, then, have to be more violence? Is negative action the only kind we know? Are we really that bankrupt in spirit? Isn't it obvious that the action needed is a positive sort, affirming in our living what we claim to be fighting for? It is certainly true that we cannot live responsibly without using force, without coercing and disciplining one another. But loving creative discipline requires that we work as one with the soul of the one disciplined, that we offer in its place something for that we would take away. We see the basic principles to lay in child psychology. If a child is being "naughty" it means that his sacred self, his social self, needs help and encouragement. So while denying
