FALSE ARREST VICTIM TRIES SUICIDE

"Dark-Skinned Man" Beats Jim Crow

RALEIGH—A dark-skinned man who identified himself as a Moorish-American of the Moslem faith won by default in a short-lived skirmish over public segregation here last Friday.

Richard D. Bey, 42, who listed his home as Newark, New Jersey, was freed by local Court Judge Albert Doub who dismissed a case against him when he was arrested at the bus station terminal here for refusing to move from the white waiting room.

Bey was arrested at the bus terminal here Wednesday afternoon by two policemen after, it was reported, station employees had not been able to get him to move from the white waiting room.

Bey accompanied the policemen willingly to the police station, but told arresting officer R. L. Randolph that he was not a Negro. "I am a Moorish American and a human being," he was quoted as saying.

The officer reported that Bey further stated that although he was a native of Troy, New York, he had lived in Newark for the past 21 years. He insisted that his ancestors were born in Morocco and that he had adopted the Moslem religion sometime ago.

When his case came before the city court Friday, court officials were unable to find a law under which they could convict him.

Acting solicitor Harry McMullan, Jr. said a section of the law governing inter-state commerce "empowered and directed the Utilities Commission to require the establishment of separate rest rooms for white and colored races." But apparently there is no law covering segregation in the waiting rooms, he added.

Judge Doub ordered the charge against Bey dismissed without testimony.

Attendance Of Bias Schools Is Challenged

KING WILLIAM, VA. — The legal fight against Jim Crow in public schools took a new and complicated twist last week as NAACP lawyers challenged the validity of compulsory school attendance based on segregation laws. Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed an appeal on January 9 on behalf of Negro parents of West Point, Va., who were convicted of violating the state's compulsory attendance law because they refused to send their children twenty miles out of town to a Jim Crow high school over which the town's school board has no jurisdiction.

The so-called "West Point school strike" came about when the school board closed the Negro high school in that town and ordered parents to send their children to Hamilton-Holmes High School, twenty miles outside the corporate limits of the town. When the Negro parents refused to do this and presented their children to the all-white West Point High School for enrollment, admission was refused on the ground that it would violate the state's segregation laws. But, states the NAACP brief, "the school authorities of the Town have not afforded any other public secondary school to which their attendance can lawfully be required although defendants at all times have been ready, able and willing to send their children to such a school."

DESPONDENT MAN WRONGFULLY JAILED TWICE Attempts Suicide In Jail

CLARENCE JONES

A 28 year-old man tried to commit suicide in the Durham County jail last Wednesday night in an attempt to write the final chapter to a series of perhaps one of the most unfortunate sets of coincidences that fate can spin.

Clarence (Buster) Jones, a mild mannered chap, was released from Lincoln Hospital Sunday after what he hopes is the end to a series of unhappy incidents, both apparently involving cases of mistaken identity. Jones' story may well refute the old maxim, "lightning never strikes twice in the same place."

Jones was taken to the hospital from the city jail here early Thursday morning where he had tried to hang himself in his cell from a noose fashioned out of his underwear.

At the hospital where he was pronounced mentally balanced, the obviously distraught, and disturbed Jones told reporters and police that he tried to "end it all" because he felt the cards were so well stacked against him that no matter how hard he tried, he was certain to fall victim to some unlucky incident.

In brief, here is Jones' story concerning the two cases of mistaken identity which made him want to stop living.

A little over a year ago while travelling from Georgia, where he had worked in a pulp mill, to his home in New Jersey, he stopped off in Laurinburg, intending to stay there for a few hours. His grandparents live in nearby Maxton, and he planned to see them before going on to New Jersey.

Before he could get over to nearby Maxton to see them, police arrested him on the streets for the robbery of a service station in Laurinburg. He was convicted and sent to prison at Lillington where he served nearly 13 months of an 18 months sentence.

Released on parole for his good behavior from the Lillington prison a few days ago, he decided, with 13 dollars in his pocket, and a fifth grade education, to continue his journey to New Jersey which was forcibly interrupted by the prison term.

He stepped off the bus at Durham and while strolling down main street near the main police precinct station, was spotted by police and arrested again, this time for the murder of a Baltimore druggist last June.

The arresting officers nabbed him because they thought he fitted the description of the murderer supplied them by an artist's drawing of the suspect. The artist's sketch was made from a verbal description given police at Baltimore.

Although Jones protested his innocence, stating that he was serving a prison term in Lillington at the time the murder was committed, he was lodged in jail and stated that he was beaten by officers who tried to get a confession from him.

Kansan Tells Group Ike Favors Civil Rights Law

WASHINGTON — The Eisenhower Administration will pass Civil Rights Legislation declared Senator Frank M. Carlson, Kansan, to the 300 members of the newly formed National Council of Republican Leaders at an organization meeting held at Odd Fellows Temple, 9th and T. Street, N. W.

Senator Carlson pleaded with delegates from 36 states and the District of Columbia to be tolerant in a pioneer mood which this Administration will wage to bring full democracy to all citizens.

The new organization was formed upon the call of Thurman L. Dodson, Washington Attorney and well-known Republican leader, to clarify the relationship of Republicans workers with the Republican Administration in a statement of policy which was adopted by the council.

The group declared the question of liaison with the National committee can and should be worked out and further dedicated themselves to the task of channelizing such activities that will bring about complete harmony by retaining and increasing Negro support by the Republican party.

Serving on the committee with Mr. Dodson were P. G. Porter of Kansas; Alexander Barnes, North Carolina; Harold Flowers, Arkansas and Miss Roberta Church, Tennessee.

NCC Seeks To Restore $$$ Cut

Belief Expressed That Slash By Advisory Group Would Hamper Graduate Program

An attempt by North Carolina College officials to have the college's original request for building funds restored by the State legislature appeared in the offing as reports were made public here this week that the institution's request for nearly four million dollars in construction was turned down by the State Advisory Budget Commission.

The college had requested the Advisory Budget Commission to ask for funds totalling $3,783,172 to construct biology, commerce and education buildings, a student union and a graduate women's dormitory. Funds for none of these construction projects were requested by the commission in its recommendations to the State legislature last Thursday.

Informed sources say that college officials will in all likelihood re-submit the request for construction funds at hearings, to be held soon, by a joint committee of the State senate and House of representatives on appropriations.

Originally, it was the opinion of many observers that the college undertook an expansion of its graduate program only on the contingency that several permanent improvements, including the new building projects turned down by the advisory budget commission, would be made.

Support for the new construction projects at the joint committee hearings is expected to come from officials at the University of North Carolina who gave their support to plan to expand NCC's graduate program on the condition that facilities would be expanded.

Fear was expressed by many early this week that the graduate program at NCC would have to be curtailed drastically if the legislature refuses to grant the request for building funds.

The Advisory Budget Commission also rejected much of the request for permanent improvements at 14 other state institutions. These institutions sought 41.3 million dollars in new construction, but the commission approved of only 2.4 in construction and repairs.

The Commission did recommend a hike in operating expenses for the college for the two tenths of a second off the world record of 3.3 set by Dick Atlesky. The speedy Calhoun, who hails from Gary, Ind., is set to take part in the Philadelphia Inquirer games at Constitution Hall this week-end. Shown in the center is Joel Shankle of Duke University who finished fourth in the event.
