Top Jobs For Race Is Forecast Of Officials

WASHINGTON, D. C. Officials of the National Alliance of Postal Employees this week expressed their belief that the reorganization of the Post Office Department proposed by Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield will result in a number of top echelon jobs for Negroes.

The opinion was expressed by NAPE President Ashby B. Carter of Chicago, who had his organization submit a list containing the names of some 200 Postal Alliance members to the postal high command for consideration for top bracket jobs. This list is now in the hands of the patronage committee of the Republican National Committee.

NAPE Welfare Director W. C. Jason, declared that the NAPE expects a favorable reaction under the reorganization program and a fair share of top echelon jobs.

"To effect the reorganization," Dr. Jason said, "should give the National Alliance of Postal Employees' reassurance of a fair deal through the new personnel section."

Basic item in the reorganization is the creation of new personnel section in the Post Office Department, headed by an Assistant Postmaster General, who, according to Summerfield's plan, would be charged with: "Fair and impartially administered standards with respect to such personnel areas as selection and promotion."

Leather Shoes Subject Of 1,200 Chemists At Three Day Conclave Held At Cincinnati, Ohio

NEW YORK
Those gay, pretty, leather shoes that adorn your feet were the subject recently of a three-day conclave of 1,200 chemists, among them the nation's leading scientists.

Leather chemists from all parts of the United States and Europe met in Cincinnati to discuss new scientific developments that are providing Americans with better-looking and longer wearing shoes.

Experts on dyes disclosed that shoe leather is now produced in more than 150 colors—and more are coming up. Which explains why the average shoe store window sparkles like a jewelry shop.

A special session was devoted to the new aniline "miracle" dyes, which are uncovering the natural beauty of leather, hidden these many years by heavy coats of pigment. The aniline finishes, now being used in most of America's tanneries, are producing those richly shaded leather shoes which you are beginning to see in shoe stores—and which will be everywhere this fall.

The aniline process involves the application of an almost transparent finish to leather, which allows the natural grain and individual markings to show through. The most popular aniline dyes so far developed are a whole family of beige to browns, plus greens, red and a few blues.

Another development of interest to the nation's women are the metallic finishes. These produce glowing, gem-like shoes in bronze, gun metal, copper and golden tones. These, likewise, will be found in the shoe shops this fall.

And, of course, the new leathers of many hues and textures also go into handbags, belts, gloves, jackets—in fact, into a multitude of articles ranging from wallets to huge upholstered sofas.

The meeting, which was the 50th anniversary convention of the American Leather Chemists Association, was told that today's new leathers are seen where leather was never used before. Fashionable women wear dainty leather collars and cuffs
