LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

I noted in the Carolina Times an editorial relative to participation in community financial drives on a segregated basis. I of the Durham PTA Council. should like to explain just how this drive, which was labeled, "Mothers March on Polio", was set up. There are two PTA councils in Durham, the president of one of which I happen to be. "SMALL BUSINESS"

Here is a problem you will hear more about, especially as unemployment becomes more acute at this time of the year.

Various states and cities new have tax laws which are upsetting the normal flow of goods and business.

In fact, some business men claim nation can expect aggravated unemployment problems three months of every year.

Various

tween January 30 and March 1.

La California, for example, a tax of 8% on half of the invoice value of the geeds is imposed.

The California law is typical. Some states have a lower rate, some have higher. But result is that during the first part of the year, wholesalars, retailers are not buying in normal quantities.

In turn, lack of erders as factories and processors curtails production, with laid off workers.

Few wholesalers or retellers can afford to be caught at tax time with a normal inventory. In some close margin commodities as canned foods, many appliances, and others, a 3% tax virtually whee out profit on warehouse goods.

Some observers also claim state and city inventory taxes contribute to the farm problem. Some farm products, such as manufacturing milk, edible oils, peanuts, are bought by processors on short term need basis.

But when processors have few orders this curtails buying, creating price alump.

Some question is expressed over constitutional legality of state and city inventory taxes.

While states and oitles have a legal right to levy taxes, it is

While states and cities have a legal right to levy taxes, it is also basic premise of Constitution that states cannot restrict commerce. And that appears to be the effect of these taxes.

These laws are working an especial hardship on independent wholesale distributors. Factory owner distributing branches can presumably absorb the inventory taxes and apply their losses against the company's over-all income tax. However, independents do not have this escape.

There is another paradox. Often the distributor or retailer is paying a tax en goods he does not actually own.

The traditional theory of taxation is that people pay taxes on property they own.

Itsi in the distribution business, the inventory tax, is often a tax en a debt, because frequently warehouses are stocked un herrowed memory. Thus, there has been added to the taxing of home, and preparty wowed, a tax en wate is sweet.

has been added to the taxing of income, and paperty owned, a tax on what is owed.

This is not a national tax.

If is primarily a matter of local cancern, attheward with ovidence manning that these local taxes obstruct trade, it may become matter of Congressional.
