DR. LOUIS J. BUDD, ENGLISH: "It would do both Duke and NCC a world of good to attend events on both campuses. I wish they (NCC) could and would come and that they could feel welcome when they do."

DR. GLENN NEGLEY, PHILOSOPHY: "It is indeed unfortunate that a university such as Duke ought to be, is not a leader rather than a member of the rear guard in a social movement which has every moral and legal justification."

Cong. Diggs Charges Attorney General's Plan Is Inadequate

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Stating that Attorney General Herbert Brownell's judicial program for 1956 "completely ignores an obvious need for strong action on civil rights", Congressman Charles C. Diggs, Jr. (D-Mich.) has criticized the plan approved by President Eisenhower as being "inadequate and compromising."

The Brownell program submitted to the President on Oct. 21 calls for (1) Legislation to outlaw invasion of the privacy of juries; (2) Construction of two "maximum custody" prisons at the combined cost of $16,500,000. (3) The appointment of Federal public defenders and (4) The creation of 23 additional Federal Judgeships.

Attorney General's proposals were aimed at the serious national crime problem, Diggs expressed disappointment that Brownell, in spite of universal concern over the Emmett Till case and continuing discrimination against Negroes in the South, did not consider the subject of civil rights worthy of mentioning.

The Michigan Representative added that he felt that the issue of civil rights alone is important enough to merit a conference between Brownell and the President.

"Undemocratic treatment of America's Negro citizens, especially that of denying them the right to 'vote', stated Diggs, 'is more criminal than

After Thursday's TV show, there followed a series of alumni

DUKE CHRONICLE FINDS MANY PROFESSORS AGAINST THE UNIVERSITY'S BIASED POLICY

How completely shackled by the fetters of prejudice and wed to the theory of white supremacy are the administrative officials of Duke University stood out in bold relief recently when they vetoed the plan of the Duke Players Student Executive Council to integrate play audiences.

Wishing to repay the many friendly gestures of the Dramatic Department of the North Carolina College, the Players Executive Council of Duke University voted to extend to the NCC campus a season book campaign similar to that recently carried out on East Campus.

Before putting the plan into execution, the Council submitted it to the administration in order to ascertain their opinion. The University Big Brass, after some investigation, forthwith tabled the plan.

The dissatisfied Student Players Council wanting to know the reason for this action questioned members of the Administration to find them "either wordily evasive or violently opposed to the plan." They offered as a justification for this reaction, "We cannot invite anyone to come to our shows and performances without providing adequate facilities (restroom and seating) for them."

Dr. WILLIAM B. HAMILTON, HISTORY: "I have always seen seats reserved in both Negro and white theaters for those of the other color and have no objection to setting aside seats for Negroes, since this seems to be a universal practice."
