NAACP Won't Appear Before School Hearings

CHARLOTTE — The NAACP will not appear at hearings on proposed legislation to permit the state to maintain segregation in the public schools.

This was the word this week from Kelly M. Alexander, president of the State NAACP.

The State legislature will convene in special session, beginning Monday, to consider proposals submitted by the Pearsall Advisory Committee on education. It is expected to hear testimony on the proposed legislation from interested groups and individuals early in the week.

Already, it has been revealed that a ministers association from Chapel Hill and representatives of the State Parent Teachers Association have requested time to be heard before the legislators.

Governor Hodges made public details of the Pearsall committee proposals last week. Key features of the plan are a bill to allow the state to pay tuition costs to private schools and to permit local school units to close the schools in "intolerable" situations.

"We certainly don't see any practical advantage to be gained from presenting our views before the Governor or state legislature which has unanimously passed resolutions condemning the Court's order to desegregate schools," Alexander said this week.

"The program presented by the Governor does not constitute good faith implementation of the governing constitutional principles as enunciated in the Supreme Court decision of May 17 and 31," he continued.

"The action of the Governor and the advisory committee certainly tends to increase rather than decrease possibility of litigation. They are certainly not assisting in creating a climate for acceptance and compliance.

"It is questionable in our minds as to legal validity of the (Continued on Page Eight)

Full Participation Said Withheld In Scheduled State Convention

According to a vote taken here Saturday afternoon at a joint meeting of all Negro labor union officials, there will be no participation of Negroes in the annual convention of the North Carolina Federation of Labor to be held here next month.

The meeting, held at the labor temple located at the corner of Proctor and McMann Streets, brought together a majority of the leaders of Negro labor in Durham. A majority of those present expressed the opinion that the time of taxation without representation, so far as Negro labor members are concerned, is over. From the beginning, Negro members have been paying the same dues as whites, but have consistently been denied the full rights of membership, it was stated.

The same question arose at the annual session in Asheville last year with Negro members reportedly being given the usual run-around about full membership participation.

This year's session is scheduled to be held at the Washington Duke Hotel here where on several occasions Negroes have attended banquets of various groups, both as members and non-members.

The joint meeting here Saturday was presided over by Guy Mazzyk, president of the group. Members were called on to give their views in the matter and with the exception of three, all expressed themselves as being in favor of not participating in the Federation of Labor annual meeting if they are to be humiliated with a segregated policy.

During the week, many local Negro leaders in other fields expressed themselves as backing the move of the labor leaders to the fullest extent and much praise was heaped upon the labor group for taking such a forthright stand.

Disclosure of the fact that Weaver has sought applications to enroll his son in the school came this week from the Chapel Hill school board.

The Board agreed in its meeting last Thursday to send Weaver immediately application blank and a copy of rules adopted by the board regarding procedure for changing schools. It also sent an explanatory statement adopted later by the board regarding policy in changing of schools.

Weaver had requested application from the school board and Superintendent C. W. Davis. He asked for "the necessary prerequisites for registration, and attendance" at Chapel Hill elementary school to be sent to him "as soon as it is consistent with good business judgement."

His letter was read at Thursday's meeting of the board.
