champion who was awarded $75; Elishia Dukes, Evergreen, second place winner, $25; Nick Fitchard, Huntsville; Charley McGuire, Troy; and Dr. J. F. Drake, president of A. & M. Bottom, left, Mr. Bettis, the champion, is showing some Soll Conservation officials how one of the terraces in his cotton field drains the rain water off into a two-acre kudzu pasture. This reduces erosion to a minimum. By following such practices,

Howard President Hits Jim Crow, Colonialism in Dentists' Speech

HAMPTON, Va. Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, blasted segregation and colonialism in an address delivered to the National Dental Association at Hampton Institute tonight. He said that in the past sixty years some 1,250,000,000 colored people in the world have become free or partially free and that Great Britain, France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Holland and other nations that fostered colonialism in international policies are no longer the great world powers they once were.

Johnson pointed out that colonialism suffered its downfall because of bitterness and strife among the colonial nations. He made it clear that the power of all these nations combined is still a poor third to that of the United States and Russia.

The great educator said that the nations awoke too late to find that the injustices rendered on the colored people of the world left them incapable of trusting each other.

In striking a blow against segregation, Johnson said, "Those of us who hold on to a system which has failed all over the world. The price of maintaining segregation in the United States will be the loss of power in the struggle for world leadership rests in the hands of the colored nations and that they cannot trust us as long as we have Georgia, Mississippi, and Virginia. "The only way we can bring them on our side," he said, "is to convince them that we are rapidly beginning to get rid of it." Dr. Johnson said his sentiments are similar to those of Thomas Jefferson when he said, "When I consider slavery and remember that my God is just, I tremble for my country." The Howard president added, "Segregation is the most tragic dilemma of human faith in the history of the human race."

Music was provided by the Crusaders Male Chorus under the direction of Mr. Charles Flax. The convention was welcomed by attorney John D. Gray of Hampton Institute. Dr. Johnson was introduced by Dr. Russell A. Dixon, dean of the Howard University Dental College.
