ate, the church was housed in a wooden frame structure. In 1933, a new edifice was erected at 12th and Highland streets, and in 1948 a Sunday School annex was added. More recently, the entire physical plant of the church has been rebuilt, affording it many modern facilities and conveniences.
Rev. Pitts instituted the first Junior church in the city in 1932 and also the first Nurses' Board, in the same year. He reorganized the Baptist Ministers' Conference in 1930, and became its first president.
Rev. Pitts is married to Mrs. Monroe Hayes Pitts, and they have six children, one of whom, a son, Robert, is assistant pastor at the Zion Baptist church in Columbia, S. C.

counsel got to court here this week, however, they found that the trespass charge had been changed to assault on a female and another charge of interfering with a registrar had been added.
Capacity crowds, composed largely of Negroes, attended all sessions of the trial here last week. At the end of the trial, one observer stated that the verdict was an "extension of the Mack Ingram doctrine, except that in this case the 'assault' was by finger pointing rather than by 'leering'."
Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were the only state witnesses.
Alexander Faison, North Carolina College student who was denied registration by Mrs. Taylor, testified for the defense.
