The Ladies Eye Men's Shoes As Items For Christmas Gift Giving

This Christmas American Women have stepped out of the shirt-and-necktie gift rut and into the men's shoe department.

Masculine footwear is attracting the feminine eye — and a share of her holiday buying budget. Catering to this trend, more shops are showing men's leather shoes in attractive new styles that make welcome gifts.

What every woman knows—that it takes the right shoe to enrich her own costume—points up the reason for her choice of footwear as a gift item this year. If his suit reflects the continental style influence, a fashion-wise wife knows that he needs a pair of the slimmer shoes to complete his wardrobe. Last winter's scuffed but sturdy brogues simply won't do for the holiday social season ahead.

Discretion is the better part of valor, too, if she plans to go dancing this New Year's Eve. Many a subtle lady has made certain that her partner will be lightfooted that night, wearing the featherweight dress oxfords she has wrapped and waiting for Christmas Day.

If the man in question is the active type, his shoe should fit his temperament. A chukka boot in black grained leather will give purpose to his stride. Today's successor to the rougher desert boot has snap and style with a modified square toe and a strap-and-buckle closure.

Salespeople in the men's shoe departments are welcoming many more gift purchasers this year. You'll find them very helpful even if you're just browsing among the attractive holiday displays. Armed with years of experience, a veteran salesman may well come up with a suggestion that will provide a man with all the style, comfort and wearability that is built into a well-cut leather shoe.

Where size is a problem, or when you are certain he would enjoy making his own choice, put fashion at your man's feet this Christmas with a festive gift certificate from his favorite shoe shop.
