

NAACP now Ready to Test Law Banning Organization in Ala.

NEW YORK—The United States Supreme Court's unanimous ruling setting aside for a second time the $100,000 contempt fine levied against the NAACP by an Alabama court opens the way for a testing, on the merits, of the Alabama ouster. Robert L. Carter, the Association's general counsel, said here today.

The effect of the decision, handed down on June 8, Mr. Carter asserted, is to bar the Supreme Court of Alabama from further delay in sending the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court down to the trial court for disposition on its merits. Also, the opinion makes it difficult for the courts of Alabama to seek to sustain the $100,000 fine as being based on any failure on the part of the NAACP to comply with the court's order other than refusing to disclose the list of members.

The U. S. Supreme Court first set the fine aside last year holding that the Alabama circuit order to turn the names of NAACP members over to the state's Attorney General was a violation of the right of freedom of association. When the case was returned to Alabama, the state Supreme Court refused to send the mandate down to the trial court although repeatedly petitioned to do so.

Finally in February of this year, the Supreme Court of Alabama re-affirmed the $100,000 contempt judgment on the ground that the U. S. Supreme Court, in deciding that the contempt was based on the failure of the NAACP to produce its membership list, was in error and that the NAACP had failed substantially to comply with other parts of the court order.

The case went back to the high tribunal which, in its June 8 decision, pointed out that the state, in its briefs and in its argument before the Supreme Court, had conceded that the only issue involved was the question of the Association's right to withhold its membership list.

Mr. Carter, who handled the case before the Supreme Court, indicated that there "will undoubtedly be many more hurdles to surmount before we will be successful in testing the validity of the ouster from Alabama. However, this decision will surely help to bring us closer to that point."
