Demonstrations In Virginia City To Be Renewed

DANVILLE, Va. — Representatives of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) have organized renewed demonstrations in this Southside Virginia city designed to announce an international boycott of products of Dan River Mills.

Matthew Jones, 22, of SNCC led a group of 30 silent pickets in front of the main entrances to Danville's chief industry, the Dan River Mills on July 8. One sign read, "We Call for a World-Wide Boycott of Dan River Mills — SNCC."

"These demonstrations are part of a request for an international boycott of Dan River Mills products," reported the Rev. L. G. Campbell, Secretary, Danville Christian Progressive Association (DCPA). "The Mills employ about 10,000 people and the industry is the economic bastion of the power structure of this segregated community of 47,000," Campbell continued. "We are asking free dom-loving people all over the world to stop buying Dan River Mills products," Campbell said.

As part of what the DCPA calls a "selective buying campaign," 60 youthful pickets walked ten feet apart in groups of six or less on July 8. This was the third day of silent picketing within the provisions of an anti-demonstration ordinance passed on June 14. There were no arrests.

Later on July 8 eleven young people picketed a meeting at City Hall where Mayor Julian Stinson and three white leaders met with eleven Negroes selected by the Mayor for the alleged purpose of easing racial tensions here. None of the Negroes at the meeting have participated in the Danville protest movement.

Last week DCPA leaders issued a statement that they would not be bound by any agreement made See DANVILLE, 6A

Chief Executive Says State Must Set Example

GREENSBORO — In his speech to the majors of North Carolina's cities here last week Gov. Terry Sanford said that he thinks the massive civil rights demonstrations staged by Negroes have gone far enough and that he is now calling on the mayors of the state's cities and towns to set an example for the rest of the nation in dealing with the racial crisis.

The Governor said that the only way to solve the problem is by "removing the injustices and indignities long suffered by the Negro race." But he also said that desegregation must be carried out in an orderly way.

Speaking to about 200 mayors, city managers and city councilmen gathered at the Greensboro branch of UNC, Sanford and his special aide, Capus M. Waynick, went on record as being opposed to any sort of civil rights law that would infringe on the rights of the owners of businesses — presumably such businesses as restaurants, hotels, motels, and theatres.

"The nation looks to us for our example in a period of unrest," Sanford declared. "Good-will should become the Tarheel trademark."

"I simply call on you to deal with the situation, to work at it, to display wisdom and courage, to understand that every child of God on earth desires a chance in life and human dignity along with it."
