An Open Letter to a Champion

By ALFRED DUCKETT

Dear Floyd:

Some people are calling you an ex-champion.

In my book, you will always be a champion. In my book, you will always be my champion.

Some people are saying you never had it. Unless they sincerely believed that all along, they are either fools who sway with the scales of what humans call vic-try—or liars who like to hear the clack of their insignificant tongues.

You have always had it—and you always will.

"It" is courage.

"It" is integrity.

"It" is dignity.

I've been in your company a number of times and I haven't heard you speak many sentences. Yet, to me, you have expressed volumes.

I am proud of where you came from—for I was born in that same community.

I am proud of where you have gone—because the highest ambition I, or any man could have, would be to go where you have gone.

I am not talking about your fame.

I am not speaking of your fortune.

I do not mean the distant places you have travelled.

Where you have gone—as far as

I am concerned—is to the very apex of regard and respect in the eyes of everyone who has a real appreciation for manliness and honor.

Some people think you should quit.

I think you should do what you damn please!

It's your life—and I think pretty fine life.

Best of luck, Champ!

YOUNG IDEAS
from Polly Ponds

Q: Will a lot of make-up help me look prettier?

A: Sometimes a little bit of make-up is more effective than a lot. It all depends on what you need to improve on nature. For instance:

If your eyes are small, if you wear glasses or if your eyelashes and eyebrows are pale, mascara, liner and pencil can make your eyes seem larger, more definitive. However, if they're a good size and blessed with thick, dark lashes... leave them alone!

If you're inclined to be sallow, you can enliven your skin tones by wearing a bright, clear red lipstick and a very faint touch of rouge on your cheeks, the tips of your nose and chin. But if your coloring is naturally vivid... skip the rouge!

If your complexion is spotted, you can disguise the fact by wearing a tinted liquid make-up under a matching shade of pressed powder. And if your skin is clear, one make-up rather than two, is all you'll need to show it at its glowing best.
