YOU'LL FIND HIM WHERE THERE'S BIG NEWS

FRANK MCGEE

Every once in a while, a personality arises whose sensitive presentation of the critical news of the day leaves a deep impression on the American public.

Such a man is Frank McGee, five years ago a total unknown, whose calm "anchorman" efforts during the reportage of the President Kennedy assassination and its aftermath, further established him as a master in his field.

McGee will serve again this year as anchorman for "Projection '64", the famous NBC year-end program, which will be telecast on December 29 under the sponsorship of Gulf Oil Corporation. Noted correspondents express their views on what could happen in the following twelve months.

Among the predictions in 1963 was one that there would be a lessening of U.S.-Soviet tensions, another a correct appraisal of the development of the Viet Nam situation. On percentage these predictions, incidentally, have been rather uncanny in accuracy throughout the year.

Millions have seen this 42-year old Louisiana-born NBC "Instant News" correspondent at work, have seen him as a focal voice at the manned space launches, have watched him take a United Nations detail on five minutes notice—and practically all viewers have been impressed by his aplomb and presence of mind under the most world-shaking circumstances.

Frank McGee attended the University of Oklahoma and then the University of California at Berkeley, after which an army stint found him at the invasion of the Aleutians with an Army tank force.

In 1959 McGee was brought up from a TV station in Montgomery, Alabama where he had been in charge of the news department, handing out for the most part, camera assignments, and often who has to analyze, interpret and report, practically all at the same time. And he must never display any panic—in fact, must be reassuring both to the public and to the other correspondents who stand by whom he is in touch.

Whether under the pressure of covering fast-breaking shattering events or of sitting in on a round-robin of distinguished correspondents, McGee's lucid distinction to the medium.

Now, Frank McGee (who writes all his own material) is on camera himself. Reflecting on the importance of news in today's world, his calmness and poise have established him in the forefront as a man who should be watched.

Shooting Dog Championship Jan. 16-19 in North Carolina Sandhills

RALEIGH—North Carolina will be host to the National Amateur Shooting Dog Championship January 16-19 for the first time in the 13-year history of this prestige event for dogs which have won in an amateur stake recognized by the Amateur Field Trial Clubs of America, Inc.

The National Amateur will be held on the field trial grounds in the 55,000-acre Sandhills Wildlife Management Area at Hoffman which is on U.S. Highway 1 between the mid-south resorts of Pinehurst and Southern Pines, and Rockingham.

Sportsmen from many different states will bring their dogs to North Carolina for the Shooting Dog Championship. Headquarters for the out of town guests will be at the Village Motel, Rockingham, and drawings for bracelets and order of running will be held at the Holiday Restaurant in Rockingham the evening of January 15.

The field trial grounds developed by the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission in the Sandhills Wildlife Management Area consist of seven, one-hour heats arranged to comprise a continuous 31-mile circuit through pine and blackjack woods. In the center of the field trial grounds are a clinic house, a horse barn with 44 stalls, and kennels for 88 dogs. The field trial area of approximately 14,000 acres has been extensively improved through clearing, planting and controlled burning to provide an ideal environment for quail which are more plentiful this year than ever before. This area is laced with sandy roads, making it possible to follow the field trial events by motor as well as by horseback cross-country.

James W. Tufts of Pinehurst and Dr. C. E. Stokely of San Antonio, Texas, will judge the National Amateur this year. Both are well known sportsmen. Tufts is active in the North Carolina Field Trial Association and has long been identified with field trials at Pinehurst and Hoffman.

Fraternal Leader Issues Plea to National Leaders To Turn Attention to "Festering Sore" of Jobless

DETROIT, Michigan—Appearing before a state convulge of the organization he heads, Neura Fraternal leader, Dr. William Banks, Supreme Grand Master of International Masons and Eastern Star issued a plea to the national leaders to turn their attention to what he called the festering sore of unemployment.

Dr. Banks expressed great concern over "the development of a callous, unconcerned, unchristian attitude toward that 6 per cent of our national population which appears to be permanently unemployed." Being out of work is a calamity to that individual and his family." He asserted he could not fathom the reasoning of those persons who claim "the present level of unemployment is one with which the nation can live."

He further indicated that the unemployment rate among Negroes is 15 per cent, more than twice that of the white population.

Dr. Banks, had words of praise for Lynn Townsend, Chrysler Corporation President, and others who have recently come out with suggestions that the provisions for employment be made to keep pace with automation.

McCain Scientists at Work on Respiratory Diseases Project

MCCAIN—When a disease severely threatens the very breath of life, its cause, treatment, prevention and prevention become of great concern. Such is the nature of certain respiratory diseases.

Because of this concern, scientists of the North Carolina Sanatorium at McCain, are at work on a project which when completed should provide answers to some unanswered questions regarding certain respiratory diseases and their relationship to tuberculosis. These diseases constitute a major health threat.

These investigations, according to Dr. W. H. Gentry, Associate Superintendent Medical Director of the Sanatorium, are designed to study for a period of 12 months the incidence and severity of chronic respiratory diseases in a group of adult patients who live primarily in rural areas. These patients will be seen in the 15 local health Departments, Chest Clinics and in the Sanatorium Out-Patient Department by sanatorium physicians. Most studies previously reported have been done on people living primarily in cities or large metropolitan areas.

Many of the patients are seen as referrals from private physicians; others are former tuberculosis patients returning to the clinics for regular check-ups.

The patients get routine tests to determine breathing capacity, chest X-rays, tuberculin skin tests and physical examinations. They also provide information for a standard questionnaire.

Those with evidence of significant pulmonary disease are advised to have a more detailed diagnostic work-up either by a private physician, or private diagnostic clinic, or in the Sanatorium. This diagnostic and treatment information will become a part of the overall study.

The study, headed financially by Tuberculosis Ass'n through Christmas Seal Funds, is still too much in its infancy to now produce the answers which are being sought. But, already it is showing that there is a need for recognizing these chronic respiratory diseases in the early stages when treatment can be more successful.

Emphysema, chronic bronchitis, asthma, silicosis and bronchiectasis are among the diseases found in addition to those having tuberculosis. Each leaves its crippling imprint on the tissues of the lungs and each takes its toll in human suffering and misery. Approximately 1,000 tests have been made since July, 1963. The completed study is expected to include more than 2,000 patients. These tests are charted by the counties from which the patients come. So far 33 counties are represented.

Patients in the emphysema group are largely white males 90% of whom have a history of smoking. Treatment for this group presents a challenging problem. At the present time intermittent positive pressure breathing machines are used in the treatment of many patients. Some of them are able to carry on a fairly normal life at home by using small, inexpensive, handoperated treatment machines.

"The patients have to be taught to live with their disease, since there are no medicines that produce a permanent cure in most of them," said Dr. Gentry.

Dr. Gentry further noted that patients with severe shortness of breath have a tendency to reduce their physical activity, some even becoming completely bed-ridden. This decreases further the efficiency of the complicated respiratory process frequently resulting in apprehension and fear of suffocation.

As a partial solution to the unemployment problem Dr. Banks called for an immediate stepping up of the federally sponsored job creation and retraining program. He requested responsible Federal officials to exert the power of their offices to compel state officials to terminate the dragging, of feet and put forth an honest effort to implement job retraining and job planning.

Dr. Banks revealed his intention to request President Johnson to establish a commission and charge it with the responsibility of proposing solutions to the unemployment problem, on a scale comparable to that of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Prosthetics Aid For Veterans Noted Increasing

WINSTON-SALEM—The Veterans Administration said today its prosthetics program for veterans with service-connected disabilities is increasing about 5 percent per year.

J. D. DeRamus, Manager of the North Carolina VA Regional Office, said aging of the veterans, which produces deterioration in their medical conditions, is the cause.

The number of service-connected disabilities requiring prosthetic increased from 302,000 to 312,000 during fiscal year 1963.

During fiscal year 1963, about $7 million was spent for the new appliances and repairs, a slight increase over the figure for the previous year.

DeRamus said that in 1963 service connected disabilities requiring prosthetics increased from 4,415 to 4,655 during the same period.

Centralized procurement of prosthetics by the VA helped hold down the money spent, even though the program grew in size and made possible better quality control on the items.
