CHILD HEALTH CLINIC OPENS—The new child health supervisory clinic opened for the first time last Wednesday afternoon in the Lakeview branch of the Stanford L. Warren Library on Dearborn Drive. The new monthly clinic offers a variety of services to preschool age children, and is designed to serve the northern part of the county, sparing residents there, trips into town for such services.

Child Health Clinic Opens on Dearborn Dr.

A "child health supervisory" clinic for children of impoverished families opened here Wednesday, December 15, at the Stanford L. Warren Library branch on Dearborn Drive. According to Dr. O. L. Ader, county health director, the clinic will operate from noon until 3:30 p.m. on the third Wednesday of each month with Dr. W. A. Cleland, local pediatrician, in charge.

Services to be offered by the clinic include physical examinations, initial childhood immunizations and "booster" shots, counseling with parents as to their children's health needs, and appropriate referrals for treatment or assistance. Dr. Cleland is being aided by a public health nurse from the Health Department and a staff member of Operation Breakthrough, local anti-poverty organization.

The new clinic, which will serve not only the Lakeview community but also the northern part of the county, brings the total of such clinics operated by the Health Department to eight. It was instigated as a special project of the Lakeview Community Council with Herbert J. Richardson as chairman.

Dr. Ader and Dr. Cleland emphasized that all such clinics are for parents with very limited family incomes who cannot afford adequate medical supervision for their children through private pediatricians. The clinics provide their services for children from infancy through five years.

CIVIC GROUPS FETE CHILDREN AT CENTERS

Various civic and youth groups provided refreshments, favors, and gifts for a total of 175 children at day care centers throughout Operation Breakthrough's "target areas," according to Mrs. Erika Richey, child development coordinator for the anti-poverty organization.

Among the organizations sponsoring Christmas entertainment for the children were: "Coffee, Talk, and Action", local service group; American Red Cross; Lowes Grove School; Y-Teens from Jordan High School; Duke Medical and Psychiatric Wives Club; and a group of Duke University freshmen.

Children treated to special parties were those at Children's House, Union Baptist Day Care Center, Russell Memorial Day Care Center, Fisher Day Care Center, and McDougald Terrace Day Care Center.

Importance is penalized, but ntris brief span of life it feels good to feel important.

fect by written notice, thereby relieving the tenant of having to visit the management of fice. A witness to a tenant's signature on a lease is no longer required.

The Housing Authority will predict a tenant's income for future years on a basis of past work history. The income of students, other than the spouse or head of household, will not be included for rent determination. The income of family members participating in any program of the Economic Opportunity Act will not be included for rent determination.

Charges for water used over allowances have been eliminated. There will, therefore, be no more "excess" water bills.

In commenting on the changes chairman H. E. Gwin said, "We've made more changes in 30 days than in the past 25 years!"

Burt says that the Authority has maintained a "wholesome attitude" throughout, and that he feels that "further changes are forthcoming." The rent system is still under study by the Authority, he said. He stated further that "the changes won by the McDougald Terrace Tenants Council will benefit the tenants at Few Gardens as well."

NBA Notes

Coach Fred Schaus of the Los Angeles Lakers insists that Jerry West has not reached his peak yet.

"Every year he has been with me (it includes four years at West Virginia) Jerry has improved.

"I think some of us tend to take him for granted, but I know his teammates don't. Any time they are in trouble, they look for West.

"You know how hot he was against Baltimore last spring in the play-offs. During a time See NBA NOTES 8A
