Vets Questions and Answers

Editor's Note: Below are authoritative answers by the Veterans Administration to some of the many current questions from former servicemen and their families. Further information on veterans benefits may be obtained at any VA Office.

Q—I am a veteran of World War II with a disability rating of 80 percent. I have a daughter starting her second year in college. Is she eligible for education assistance from the Veterans Administration?

A—No. You would have to be permanently rated 100 percent disabled due to a service-connected disability. However, in a separate program, children under 23 years of age of veterans with more than 50 percent disability who are attending school are eligible for monthly payments. The rate is $40 monthly if the veterans disability is rated 100 percent. In your case with 80 percent, the monthly payment would be 80 percent of $40 or $32 a month. See the nearest VA regional office for details.

Q—Are veterans of World War I eligible for GI home loans?

A—No, but they may be eligible for housing benefits under the new Housing Act of 1965 administered by the Federal Housing Administration.

Q—May a veteran who has no service-connected illness enter a Veterans Administration hospital and pay for his care?

A—No. VA hospital benefits are free to veterans with service-connected disabilities and to veterans with nonservice-connected disabilities who cannot afford hospital care. All other veterans are expected to use non-VA hospitals.

Dr. T. Nelson Baker is Specialist With Interests

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—In the age of specialists, one might be quick to assume that most professionals engaged in the sciences rarely bother to communicate beyond their own realm of career endeavor. Nothing could be further from the truth. Specialists are dedicated to their fields, to be sure, but the genuinely talented are also conversant with many other aspects of life.

A striking example of the all-around type is Dr. T. Nelson Baker, III, a 28-year-old research chemist in The Atlantic Refining Co.'s Chemical Intermediates Section at Glenolden, Pa. While attaining his Doctorate Degree in Organic Chemistry at Cornell University at the early age of 26, Dr. Baker also compiled a remarkable record of achievement in other fields. At Haverford College (Pa.), for instance, where he won his Bachelor of Science Degree in Chemistry, the youthful intellectual extended his interests and talents into many other areas—adn with success in all of them.

After leaving Peabody High School in Petersburg, Va., he enrolled at Mount Hermon School, located in the Massachusetts community bearing that name, and graduated in 1954 cum laude. Following his undergraduate work at Haverford, which he also completed with honors, Dr. Baker entered Cornell.

Serving as a graduate teaching assistant at the Ivy League institution, the personable young scholar was awarded a

Federal Voting Officials Open More Offices

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Federal voting examiners will open new voter listing offices in Carroll, Newton, Simpson, and Warren Counties, Mississippi, on Tuesday, January 4, Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., announced this week. The offices were recently designated by the Attorney General of the United States for the assignment of examiners under the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Under the Voting Rights Act, the Civil Service Commission is responsible for listing eligible voters regardless of race or color in counties designated by the Attorney General in which tests or devices have been maintained and in which less than half of those eligible to vote were registered or had voted in November 1964.

The new locations bring to 36 the number of counties or parishes to which Federal examiners have been assigned since President Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act on Aug. 6. In the 32 counties where

If you're packing for a trip to Tahiti, forget the frills and the fancy fabrics. You won't need jewelry, big heavy handbags, gloves, scarves or woollens when visiting the fabled South Seas island paradise of French Polynesia.

According to Jane Kilbourne, Pan Am's travel and fashion consultant, tourists to Tahiti should take their fashion cue from the Polynesian girls, who have learned to combine French chic with south of the equator climate.

The "little uniform" of Tahiti is a cotton sheath, with cool sandals, no stockings, no gloves and a straw tote bag to act as purse and catch-all. Instead of jewelry, you'll be wearing fresh flowers or a string of shells.

Only for evening are high heels worn, and not always then. Tahitian roads are better suited to flats and sandals. Some evenings you may need a light-weight pastel cardigan to keep off the sea breezes; usually a sleeveless dress is comfortable for morning to night.

offices have been opened Federal examiners have listed more than 81,000 persons, including over 79,000 Negroes, as eligible to vote.

which translates to a constant degrees and sunny days for swimming.

If it weren't for magazine subscriptions, financial opportunities, notices of meetings, requests for contributions to societies for the relief of this or that, we'd consider ourselves the forgotten man, so far as our personal mail is concerned.

MUU-MUUS AND BIKINIS
Tahitian women do not wear short-skirts or tight pedal-pushers, and visitors shopping in Papeete, the chief city of the island, will feel less conspicuous in cotton shifts of the "muu-muu" type. Slacks are acceptable, especially when paired with a little shift top of the native bright cotton.

Satins, silks, laces and feathers aren't seen in Tahiti, even at festival time. For dress-up occasions, it's still a fitted cotton sheath—cut floor-length, or a modified version of the Chinese cheongsam, slit way up the sides.

December to April in Tahiti is the rainy season, which means it rains a little most days, and a lightweight plastic fold-up slicker comes in handy. May to October is winter time.
