

"ARE MEN ALLOWED IN NURSING?" — This question "broke up" an audience of five hundred students at Girls High School in Boston, Mass., at a lively nurse recruitment seminar sponsored by Boston University's ODWIN (Open Doors Wider in Nursing) program.

To help reduce the nationwide shortage of 125,000 nurses, the program was aimed at interesting Negro high school girls in nursing as a career and was highlighted by a Nurses Fashion Show. Girls in the foreground are student nurses who modeled various nursing school uniforms on the auditorium stage. The Boston Seminar was the first major recruitment effort held during school hours. (Answer to the question about men in nursing: Yes. Only 1 per cent of nurses are men).

Workshop Conducted at Shaw University for Future Teachers

RALEIGH — The first workshop in the state chapters of the Future Teachers of America, sponsored by the North Carolina Teachers Association, was held Saturday, December 10, in Greenleaf Auditorium of Shaw University. The theme of the workshop was "The Profession's Responsibility for Quality Education in High Schools, Jr. High Schools, Colleges and Universities. Miss Eulah M. Battle, state student president, NEA-NCTA, A. and T. College presided.

Mrs. Wilson also introduced the keynote speaker, Mrs. Edna C. Richards, executive secretary, NCACT. Mrs. Richards referred to the teaching profession as the most challenging of the world. She pointed out that each child is a unique individual, and therefore, teaching methods must change from day to day. She challenged the high school members of PTA to look to the goal of fitting others for high places in life, as education has been the chief concern of the world. Teaching as a career should not be chosen as a whim or last resort," she stated, "but as a channel by which to come to grips with the demanding and changing society in which we find ourselves." Group sessions were held with Miss Eula M. Battle as leader, where suggestions for student organization, state programs, how to choose state officers, and how Student NEA relates to FTA, were discussed.

Mrs. Lorena Marrow, and Mrs. Edna Richards served as consultants to the advisers on the topic "Togetherness and How."

Other highlights of the highly successful program included a statement on "Why We are Here," by Miss Jean C. Macon, president-elect, State Student NEA, North Carolina College at Durham.

Bandit Holds Up Service Station

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M. — A money-hungry bandit held up an Albuquerque service station. Or, perhaps it was a hungry money-bandit.

Anyway, he got away with $50, a box of crackers and a bologna sandwich. The attendant told police the man put the cash in his lunch bag and escaped.
