... answers questions about Junior Miss etiquette, grooming and interests.

Q. Boy, I'm in the doghouse! Last night Mom had company for dinner and she used the good dishes. When I dried them and put them away, a few got scratched and one was chipped. Is she mad?

A. Mom's good china does deserve extra care! And it is more fragile than everyday pottery. But here's a tip for all dish driers and stackers: Lay a Kleenex dinner napkin (opened to one-fourth its total size) between each plate as you put them back in the cupboard. This protects plates, saucers, bowls as you put them away and again when you get them out the next time. Suggest this to Mom and see if you aren't on her winning team again!

Q. I bought a bottle of perfume last week that took half my allowance! I thought it would be great then — and now I don't like it. How can you tell if you will like a perfume?

A. "Testing" a perfume can do away with costly trial and error! Almost every place where cologne or perfume is sold has test bottles of the fragrances they display. So try it out first. Spray a little on your wrist and some on a Kleenex tissue. Then go do something else. After an hour or two, sniff the wrist area and your tissue to see if you like the fragrance. If you don't, go back another day and try again. Don't try two the same day or you will confuse the scents. If you do like the perfume after living with it for an hour or so, that's your cue to buy!

Q. I have a very embarrassing problem. I perspire a great deal. It's bad enough during winter, but with hot weather here I'm in a real panic. I keep trying different deodorants, but nothing seems to help.

A. A good deodorant is just one step in controlling this problem. And, let's face it, it is essential to good grooming. First, a deodorant is not intended to stop perspiration, but it meant merely to control odor. Some deodorants contain bacteriostats and might be more helpful to you than those which do not. If these are not satisfactory you might try an anti-perspirant which contains chemicals that actually reduce the amount of perspiration to reach the skin. Dress shields will help prevent staining when you do perspire, but remember that both shields and clothes need regular laundering. Your daily bath with a mild, anti-bacterial soap will help control odor, too.

You can get a variety of information from stamps of the world.

Every nation's economic and political history is reflected on its postage. Countries honor not only their own histories, but those of other nations as well.

"One of the great benefits of stamp collecting is the knowledge you acquire as you go along," notes Ervin J. Felix, stamp editor at Whitman Publishing Company, Racine, Wis. Nations will commemorate great events, tragic and otherwise, on their stamps. The Island of Martinique, for example, issued a stamp showing the Mont Pelee Volcano, which erupted in 1902, killing thousands of people.

Czechoslovakia recently honored the American Indian in a series of stamps. Africa's Nyasaland has a stamp showing how tobacco is dried in that country. Austria issued a stamp illustrating a page from the first Lutheran bible.

A Turkish stamp depicts the famed Trojan horse. One of history's riddles is the source and meaning of ancient writing on a large stone on St. Vincent's Island. The stone is depicted on one of that Island's postage stamps.

Know when Alexander Hamilton was born? If you collected stamps from the West Indies, you'd probably know. He was born on St. Christopher's Island Jan. 11, 1757, and the event is commemorated on a postage stamp.

"There is virtually no limit to the interesting factual information available on stamps," says Felix, whose firm manufactures stamp collecting albums and accessories. All you have to do is pick your country or subject. Chances are there's a line of stamps to match your interest. And before you know it, you've become an expert in some field of knowledge — without even opening a textbook.
