

Speight's Automobile Service Holding Grand Opening of New Station at Pilot & Fayetteville

The new Speight's Automobile Service Station located at Pilot and Fayetteville Streets, boasts of modern facilities and services, second to none in a city of an ever increasing number of new enterprises.

The new location of the Pure Oil Distributor marks another milestone in his journey along the line of reliable and dependable service over the years to car owners of the Durham community.

Prospective customers arriving at the modern structure for the first time, no doubt will take for granted, the present business establishment. They probably will not realize or think too seriously about the time and labor that have spent over the years to build a name of efficient and dependable service which ultimately spells the difference between those who survive in business and those who do not.

In 1940, when gasoline was priced at 23 cents per gallon, Theodore Speight with one helper opened his first service station here at 422 E. Pettigrew St. Building a career of dependability from the beginning resulted in the continuing increase in business and the need for expanding the physical plant. Tire recapping, wheel alignment and balancing were added services made available at the first station.

By 1945, the second location at 500 Fayetteville St., was the answer. At this time, Theodore was joined by his brother Charlie, who had recently returned from military service.

In 1961, the brothers, in partnership, opened a station at 901 Fayetteville St., known as Speight's Southside Service.

Many other service improvements such as tire recapping, fulltime mechanics, and metered fuel oil delivery, were added to the ever expanding business. More recently when the auto inspection law was enacted, Speight's met the qualifications to become a licensed Safety Inspection Station.

Melvin Speight, Theodore's son helped his father in the business, stopping only for two year period spent in the service and later attending A&T

--Suspended

They charged Moore with "using the Philadelphia NAACP office for his personal gain" and "using vile, abusive, threatening and profane language toward the public generally."

Wilkins, in his letter to Moore, used the authority vested in him as executive director to suspend Moore as president of the North Philadelphia Branch, pending a full hearing as required by the civil rights organization's constitution. Moore has 15 days to appeal the charges in writing with the NAACP national office.

Moore's troubles with the NAACP, the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization, started when the Association's national board of directors ordered Moore's branch split into five units as has been done in other major cities throughout the country. Moore rejected the plan and went to court with an appeal. He lost the court battle in Philadelphia and later sought and received an injunction from the New York courts.

Commenting on Moore's refusal to adhere to the NAACP's national policy on multi-branch operations, Wilkins told newsmen that the Philadelphia unit was too big for one man to handle even if he was a saint."

--Protest

Continued from front page soon forthcoming Durham may awaken to find itself involved in a situation similar to that now being experienced in Newark, Watts, and other cities where rioting and violence have occurred.

As it now stands, it is the consensus of opinion that, whatever, however, all segments of the Negro community are opposed to the erection of an additional public housing project in the southeastern or Negro section of the city.

--Church

Continued from front page school desegregation for the present "freedom of choice" plan, which has resulted in only token segregation and which the Justice Department claims is ineffective because of intimidation of Negroes who exercise that choice.
