

North Carolina College Grad Taking Nursing at Lincoln Hosp.

Among the attractive young ladies admitted to the Department of Nursing at North Carolina College this year, one face is different—it is a man's.

Emmanuel Cooper, a native of Nash County, is a male registered nurse seeking his B.S. degree in nursing at NCC.

COOPER

Cooper, a graduate of North Carolina A&T College, worked as a hospital attendant in Richmond after his high school graduation.

He studies biology with a minor in chemistry, planning to become a high school science teacher. After graduation from A&T, he began work in the laboratory of the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

Encouraged by physicians and other associates to begin professional work in the health fields, Cooper entered the two-year diploma program at the Long Island College Hospital School of Nursing, taking graduate work in biology at the same time.

Following graduation from the school of nursing Cooper became a medical-surgical staff nurse at the Long Island College Hospital, becoming medical-surgical supervisor in charge of 140 beds in July.

He will complete his studies at NCC in May and will return to the supervisory staff at Long Island College Hospital. He plans to do further graduate work in nursing or biology, and is interested in medical-surgical nursing, pediatrics and in "all patients who need help," he says.

UPPER MARLBORO, Md.—A Maryland law which says a mother's illegitimate pregnancy is ground ruling that her other children are neglected was challenged in court here this week by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. (LDF).

The motion was filed in the Prince George's County Circuit Court in behalf of nine children who were declared to be neglected solely because their mothers had given birth to more than one illegitimate child.

Under the Maryland statute, passed in 1962, a judge can conclude that children are being raised in an "unstable moral environment" if their unwed mother has become pregnant or has given birth to a child within the preceding 12 months.

In challenging this statute, the LDF attorneys further asked the court to name the mothers of the defendant children as parties to the case. One of the mothers involved in the case is white, the remaining two are Negroes.

The LDF attorneys also raised another novel issue in which they asked the court to appoint a court lawyer for the defendant children and their mothers.

This is the first time that a court has been requested to provide paid counsel for a case falling outside of the criminal area. The current case is being tried in a civil proceeding.

According to LDF attorney Leroy Clark a favorable ruling by the court on the LDF motion would in the future have a "substantial impact on efforts made around the country to deal with mothers receiving welfare in an arbitrary and coercive fashion, by interjecting a lawyer between them and hostile prosecutors."

The LDF attorneys handling this case are J. Franklin Bourne of Upper Marlboro, Md. and Leroy Clark of New York City.
