Moving on at Durham High

By Demetria McArthur

This year at DHS, the senior class of 1969 is presenting Camelot as their class play. Presentations are scheduled for May 2 and 3.

This year there are two black actors and one committee chairman. Harold Barnette and Johnny Freeman are both knights in King Arthur's court. How about that? The students refer to it as King's Arthur's INTERGRATED COURT.

Harold says that the work is hard but pleasant. He doesn't think that there has been any difficulties whatsoever with the other cast members. He likes the role in CAMELOT more than in the CRUCIBLE or OKLAHOMA! and other past productions. He said it was more believable to have a black knight in the Court of King Arthur, but who would believe a black Nathaniel Hawthorne? Harold commented that the only setback was that not enough black students tried out for parts.

Johnny Freeman frankly stated that he did not enjoy being in the play at all.

Gayle Talliaferro was costume chairman. His job was to design and make the costumes for the play. After attaining her committee, it was her responsibility to assign various duties she wanted done. Gayle said that nothing was easy and at times she found herself getting behind in her work. She enjoyed the rehearsals and observing the play's progress. She was very grateful that the senior class recognized her ability and talent in designing and constructing costumes. She was grateful for the responsibility.

Plans for the play have been in progress about three months. It took Gayle and her committee approximately a month to finish costumes. There were other suggestions for the senior play and the senior class found it difficult to decide. Other choices were: West Side Story, South Pacific, Fiddler on the Roof, The Unsinkable Molly Brown, Brigadoon, My Fair Lady, and others.

After hard work, a lot of fun, tears, arguments and a little of everything... the class of '69 awaits the success of CAMELOT.
