Negro Bank In Atlanta Opens New 12-Story Office Building

CITIZEN TRUST CO.—ATLANTA BUILDING

First Downtown Location for Blacks in Ga.

ATLANTA — A new era in banking for Negroes was ushered in last week when the Citizens Trust Company of Atlanta Georgia moved into its new home. For years, affectionately known as the bank on Auburn Avenue, it officially began business in its new quarters Monday morning.

The new building, a gleaming multi-million dollar edifice, is considered as one of the finest in the Southeast and perhaps the nation, according to an official of the bank. This is first time in the history of the country that any Negro bank has undertaken a multi-million dollar investment in the downtown area of a major city. The bank is now located at the corner of Houston Street and Piedmont Avenue on the edge of downtown Atlanta.

Each Subject To be Taught By Experts

Project Outreach and North Carolina Central University, with support from the Small Business Administration, will conduct a Business Management seminar beginning January 8, 1970. The seminar is to be directed to small Black businessmen who are seeking ways to improve and expand their present operations or persons trying to get started in business.

Ed Stewart, Director of Project Outreach, stated he along with Dr. S. B. Fulbright, and Lindsey Merritt, both of the faculty at NCCU, will coordinate the seminar with support from Forest Gunn of the SBA Regional Office.

According to Stewart, Project Outreach has conducted three such seminars during the past year and received very favorable response from the participating businessmen. He observes "they are not the total answer to the many problems of the Black businessman but we feel some of the answers are found at these sessions and we try to show the businessman where he can find some other answers while stimulating him to solve some problems on his own."

Project Outreach operating under the supervision of the Durham Business and Professional Chain through federal funds granted to the National Business League is designed to give management training and technical assistance to small businessmen while helping them to get necessary capital and "know-how" in order to be effective in the struggle for economic survival.

Stewart said "over 100 Black businessmen have been served through the seminars." We feel that this one will be the most beneficial because we are using the mistakes made on the previous ones to insure a more organized approach to the more common problems.

Lecturers for the seminar will come from the NCCU faculty, SBA and successful businessmen and consultants within the Durham community. Currently, suggestions are coming into the Outreach office suggesting certain courses that should be covered during the seminar.

Although this is the first such project held at NCCU, the administration supports it as another step in involving the university in the area of community problems. Certificates of performance will be given the qualifying participants at the seminar.

This seminar is open to the (See SEMINAR page 5A)

Durham Teachers Approve Action Of Association As Right Move

Educators See Vote as Decree For the Merger

The move by the North Carolina Teachers Association that cleared the way for merger with the North Carolina Education Association was hailed by Durham educators as a move in the right direction.

According to John H. Lucas, one of the NEA Directors for North Carolina and a special officer of the NCTA, the action taken by the 88th Delegate Assembly was a wise and forward decision toward developing a single strong state education association which ensures adequate representation and full participation of all state educators regardless of race, creed, or ethnic origin.

Lew H. Hannen, Superintendent of the Durham City Schools view the decision as a "fine thing." "This, I'm sure," Hannen said "will enable us to go forward at the local level. I have advocated such a move toward unity on the local level for sometime now, but the state always advised us to let it occur on the state level, and now I think we can move forward into a new sphere of education in North Carolina."

The sentiments of J. M. Schooler, Principal of Shepard Jr. High School was also in favor of the decision. "I was glad to see the vote go like it did because it is a step in a direction that many of us wanted to go. Schooler also thought that the overwhelming margin of the vote of significant in that it was a true reflection of the Black educators in North Carolina.

In commenting on the vote, H. C. McAllister, Principal of Whitted Jr. High School said the decision by the NCTA delegate assembly was the best move at this time because it was in accordance with the research of the factfinders committee, and rewarded the hard work done by the Liaison Committee.

"Anything that keeps educators separated is detrimental to the children at large," was (See TEACHERS 5A)

NEA Factfinder Group Report Accepted at Delegate Assembly

By voting to accept recommendations of the National Education Factfinder Committee, the North Carolina Teachers Association hurdled a major barrier obstructing merger with the North Carolina Education Association. The vote, 558 for and 20 against, came at a one-day meeting held at the Durham Hotel-Motel and the Civic Center. The NCTA is a predominately Negro professional organization for teachers in the state. The NCEA is a similar organization which is predominately white.

discussing the possibility of merger for some time now, after indications that there would eventually be single system of education in North Carolina. Talks, however, have been hampered by considerations of positions of Blacks within the new group if the two would merge.

According to E. B. Palmer, Executive Secretary of NCTA, Black educators are unwilling to become a part of a group that would not allow them to have a voice in policy making decisions. After several such impasses, the NEA was called (See FACTFINDER 5A)

Harlem Prelate Favors Pastore Bill in Congress

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Rev. David N. Licorish, Associate Pastor of Harlem's Abyssinian Baptist Church, appeared before a Communications Sub-Committee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, this week to deny charges that a Bill involving procedures for the renewal of the licenses of TV and radio stations is anti-black. Rev. Licorish's argument was largely a rebuttal of testimony given by other Blacks who claimed that the Bill sponsored by Senator John O. Pastore (D. R. L.) would, if passed, prevent Black applicants from acquiring licenses.

The Bill (S.2004) is an amendment to the Communications Act of 1934.

Rev. Licorish, citing his own interest in seeing Black people acquire such licenses, said that the Bill would do nothing to prevent or to hamper the application of any applicant of any color. Rev. Licorish also felt that trumped up and pre-tentious arguments discredited legitimate complaints against discriminatory legislation which does occasionally appear in Congress.

The opponents of the Bill cite as the chief area of contention, a clause which would (See PRELATE 5A)
