LDF Wins High Court Order For Feb. 1 School Integration

No Waiting Until September Granted Southern Schools

WASHINGTON, D. C. — "No waiting until next September" was the reaction of LDF attorneys to this week's Supreme Court ruling ordering public school desegregation in five core southern states.

Responding to a petition by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. (LDF) involving 11 school districts, the High Court reversed a decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and ordered pupil integration by February 1, 1970 instead of the following September.

Directly affected are 14 school districts in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi.

LDF Associate Counsel Jas. M. Nabrit III, who supervised the staff work, said:

"We understand today's Supreme Court opinion to mean that it is no longer proper to wait until next September to carry out desegregation, and school districts must act during this school year to effect (See SCHOOL page 2A)

Also present were representatives from the County NAACP and a citizen's group from Oxford.

The meeting was chaired by Lonnie Moss who spoke briefly of their purpose for gathering, and gave the floor to length report about an earlier meeting held with Superintendent L. C. Adcock concerning the controversy. Eaton said that Adcock reported that the name change was for the purpose of achieving effective administration since Creedmoor now had one school with three campuses. Eaton charged that the name change was racially motivated to prevent white children from attending a school named for a Black man. Eaton said that the name change robs the Black people of their community heritage, source of community pride, and sense of having worked hard to accomplish a worthy goal. Eaton mentioned having talked with N. E. King from HEW in Charlottesville, Va., and King agreed that the name (See PROTEST page 2A)
