Some 200 Teachers Expected To Answer Vital Mixing Questions

What problems do teachers face when schools integrate? What should the school faculty do about cheerleaders, student government, clubs?

When integration is brought about by consolidation, why does the Negro principal usually end up as assistant principal? Does school integration mean fewer jobs for Negro teachers?

Does school integration bring special disciplinary problems?

Those questions will be dealt with by some 200 teachers from nine school systems, four colleges and universities, and six counties in a conference on "Teachers and School Integration" at North Carolina Central University Saturday.

The program is the first of at least 15 such conferences to be conducted around the state in the near future. At least one conference will be held in each district of the new North Carolina Association of Educators (which will be formed on July 1 by the merger of the North Carolina Teachers Carolina Education Association.)

George E. Clarke, director of the student teaching program at NCCU, is coordinator of the conference for District Nine, including the school systems of Durham, Orange, Alamance, Caswell, Person, and Chatham Counties and the cities of Durham, Burlington, and Chapel Hill.

Also a part of the district are the education programs at Elon College, UNC, Chapel Hill, Duke University, and North Carolina Central University.

Each school system and each college or university has been asked to send a delegation of fifteen persons to the conference.

Five specific problems relating to teachers and school integration were selected for presentation during the conference by a steering committee representing each unit in the district.

The problems will be presented by a panel of five persons, moderated by James T. Burch, assistant superintendent for special services of the State Department of Public Instruction.

Topics include "Planning for Integration of Co-Curricular Activities," "Interaction Opportunities in Student Teaching," "Pioneering in Integration of Faculties," "Professional Security," and "Discipline."

"Co-curricular activities, for example, will have to deal with the problem of cheerleaders, student governments, and clubs. When integration is brought about by consolidation, the black school is usually closed, or becomes an elementary school. Students who were active in co-curricular programs in the black school often are unable to participate in the integrated school, and resentment is high.

He said the problem of presenting opportunities for white and black student teachers to interact with one another is important. NCCU and UNC-CH co-sponsored with Chapel Hill schools an experimental program in team teaching last year.

When faculties are integrated, problems arise, Clarke said.

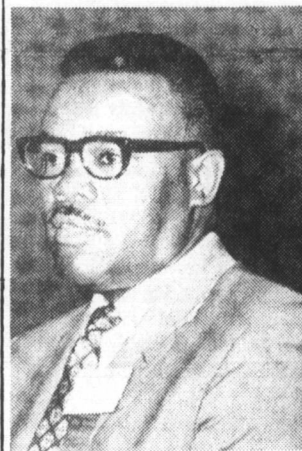

"It has been claimed, for example, that superior Negro teachers are selected for integration. (See TEACHERS 8A)

AME Bishops Favor Census; Urge Participation By Negroes

Power, Taxes Housing Linked To True Count

Bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church at the winter meeting of their Council of Bishops in Dallas, Texas, voiced their support of the Census Bureau's effort to secure an accurate count of the black population in 1970.

Mrs. Nampeo McKenney, Assistant Chief of the Ethnic Origins Statistics Branch of the Census Bureau, spoke on the 1970 census at a joint meeting of the laymen, ministers, and Bishops as well as at a closed session of the Council of Bishops. In her presentation, she stressed the importance of an accurate count to the entire population, and especially to the black communities. Apportionment of political power as well as distribution of certain Federal and local tax monies are based upon official population counts, she pointed

Alliance Sues Postmaster and Labor Secretary

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Postmaster General Winton M. Blount and Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz are named as defendants in a suit for injunctive relief brought by the National Alliance of Postal and Federal Employees and its President, Ashby G. Smith.

The aim of this legal action is to pry open the doors of the conference rooms behind which the defendants have been meeting with representatives of seven selected postal unions and discussing wages, postal reform, amnesty for absentees during the recent work stoppage and other matters of importance to every postal employee and every postal union. President Smith said that

Final Services Held for Mrs. Lu Sybil Taylor

OAKLAND, Calif.—Funeral services were held here Wednesday, April 8 for Mrs. Lu Sybil Taylor, former Durham resident and wife of Dr. Joseph H. Taylor, retired chairman of the Department of History and Social Science at North Carolina Central University.

Mrs. Taylor died in Oakland on April 1 after a brief illness. A former resident of 123 Masondale St., Durham, Mrs. Taylor was active in the Durham chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc. and was national editor of the organization's publication, Up the Hill.

Survivors include her husband and a foster son, Richard, 5115 Camden Street, Oakland, Calif.

Funeral arrangements in Oakland are being handled by Jackson's Funeral Home, 1904 Adeline Street.

"We have taken this action only after requests, demands, protests and peaceful demonstrations have failed to get even a courteous acknowledgment or response from the agency heads." As head of an independent union Smith raises this question: "What does the AFL-CIO have on this administration that makes its top officials deny justice to non-affiliated unions?"

SCLC Head To Give Address Mon. April 13 At B.N. Duke Auditorium On Campus

Program Sponsored By Campus Ministry Of N. C. Central U.

Youthful Local Suicide Victim Funeralized Tues. At Mt. Zion

Naming Storms Women Opposed

MIAMI — An official of the National Organization of Women (NOW) wants the directors of the National Hurricane Center at the University of Miami to stop naming hurricanes after women.

"The naming of hurricanes with female names reflects and creates an extremely derogatory attitude toward women," said Mrs. Davis Bolton, national vice president of NOW.

Funeral services were held Tuesday, April 7 for Gilbert Lamont Parker who was a victim of suicide April 3.

Son of Mrs. Lillie W. Parker and the late Sgt. James L. Parker, the junior high school lad was sixteen. He attended Carr Jr. High School. No cause has yet been determined for the incident.

He is survived by his mother, one brother, David Parker of Battle Creek Michigan; one sister, Mrs. Gail P. Royster of the home.
