law students, and library science students during commencement exercises Sunday, May 31, in R. L. McDougald Gymnasium.

Of that number, 120 will receive advanced degrees, including the LL. B. degree, the J. D. degree, and master's degrees in science, arts, education, and library science. The figures is a record one for the university, reflecting a 50 per cent increase in bachelor's degree candidates over the class of 1969.

Mrs. Floree McLaughlin, assistant registrar, said the increase resulted from two factors: over-enrollment of freshmen in 1966, when 1,160 were enrolled, and a reduced attrition rate among the university's students.

Speaker for the exercises, which will begin with a professional at 10 a.m., is James Farmer, Assistant Secretary for Administration, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Farmer is the former National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality.

The Reverend Frederick D. Terry, pastor of the West Durham Baptist Church, will make the invocation. The Rev. Dr. J. Hughley, college minister, will read the scripture.

President Albert N. Whiting will introduce the speaker and make the closing statement to the graduating class.

Conrad O. Pearson, Durham attorney, will be presented as a candidate for the honorary Doctor of Laws degree by Dr. Leonard Robinson, dean of the faculty at NCCU.

Henry M. Michaux, Jr., president of the university's alumni association, will induct members of the senior class into the alumni association.

The Rev. James A. Stewart will pronounce the benediction.

Presenting candidates for the degrees will be the deans of various schools at the University. (See NCCU page 8A)
