Coach Quiett Assumes Brighter Attitude for '70 NCCU Gridders

After a spring and summer spent mourning for departed backs and blockers, North Carolina Central University's head football coach, George Quiett, seems ready to look on the brighter side.

Coach Quiett, who has been advertising the weaknesses of a team which lost a host of seniors (including the entire starting backfield), now admits that he can see a few patches of blue through the clouds. "We should be about as strong as we were last year on defense," Quiett says. "Our pass rush will be weaker with the loss of Sam Singletary and Jerome Gantt."

Gantt and Singletary were among the outstanding seniors of last year's team. Both signed professional contracts last spring. They were only two of several top players, however. Also missing are offensive tackle Douglass Wilkerson, first round draft choice of the Houston Oilers, split end Julian Martin, and quarterback Herman Mathews.

One key issue not yet resolved is whether the player Quiett describes as most like Wilkerson among the returnees will in fact be able to play. "A great deal of our success will depend on how Bracy Bonham's knee operation turns out. If it is successful, then we will be able to start a letterman at each position on the offensive line."

Bonham, 6-1 and 245 pounds, is a sophomore from Winston-Salem, and runs the 100 yard dash in less than ten seconds. He and Wilkerson

Holloway and Joseph Harrell ("the most underrated player on the NCCU team during the past two years") at linebacker.

Back in the defensive secondary will be quad-captain Pete Quinn and his junior cohort Charles Bellinger. Between them, they intercepted 19 passes last season.

The Eagles will test themselves against the toughest possible opposition in their first game. They meet Alcorn A&M University of Mississippi in Philadelphia, Pa., on September 26.

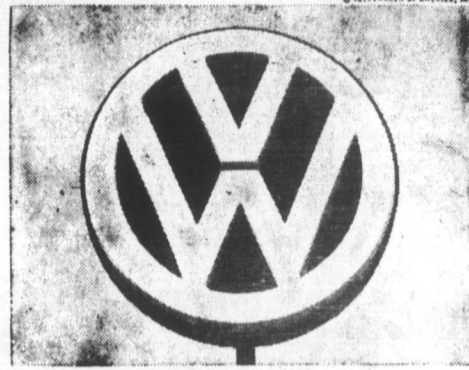

Alcorn has not lost a game in two years, and holds the mythical "black football championship."

The Alcorn match won't count in conference standing, but the remainder of NCCU's nine regular-season games will be against CIAA powers, including Morgan State, A&T and Johnson C. Smith.

Flood Files Appeal Notice

NEW YORK — Lawyers for Curt Flood have filed a notice for plans to appeal the rejection of his anti-trust action against baseball.

Flood, who had his suit against baseball rejected by Federal Court Judge Irving Cooper earlier this month, plans to appeal the decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals.
