quired the Duke Married Student Housing.

The laundromat's first year of operation was successful. The Corporation hired a full-time attendant, a mother who had been on welfare. The new job enabled the woman to get off the welfare roll.

The swimming pool's second year of operation began well, with Operation Breakthrough giving a grant and with the hiring of a full-time lifeguard who also did maintenance work on the pool. Later, however, problems developed. Mechanical difficulties cropped up with pool equipment. The difficulties, combined with the need to pay the lifeguard's salary, left the Corporation in financial trouble. To some extent, the financial difficulty has continued to this day. The trouble with the pool equipment has been aggravated by the normal cost of operating, expenses caused by vandalism and by high utility bills.

This summer, UOCI came to the aid of the Corporation with a lifeguard, Gerald Garner, a senior at NCCU, whose salary has been paid through the work-study program plus the matching paid by UOCI. Residents continue to show initiative, the latest example being a recent clean-up and trash removal of the pool area which took several days. The composition of the Corporation's board has changed; some members of the Damar board have resigned or stopped coming to meetings. The other members of the board continue to work to keep the swimming pool and laundromat operating for the benefit of the Morreene Road Community.

The youth ask that all members keep in mind their monthly meeting Sept. 27, at 5:00 p.m. Detective Allen will present a film, discussion and display on Narcotics.

BAPTISM AT MOUNT CALVARY CHURCH
Baptismal service was held at Mt. Calvary United Church of Christ, 1715 Athens Street, Durham, on September 6, at 6:00 p.m. with the pastor, Rev. J. C. Cheek officiating. At the start of this service little Miss Taronya Yvonne Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Smith and grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Jones, Sr. was joined to our church family by way of Christening. Twenty additional candidates were added by means of immersion. Included among these were six children of the Clinton family and five children from the Dennis Roberts' family along with their parents. There were four grown-ups among the remaining nine new members. We want our new members to know that we are happy to have them, for each is an asset to our congregation. It is hoped that each will select an auxiliary or ask our pastor to appoint them to a station of work where the need is greatest.

From Dishwasher to Business Man, A Dream Comes True

BY MILTON C. JORDAN

Roy Alston is a cautious man. Roy Alston is a smart man. He is ambitious and has foresight. With all this going for himself, he is an odds on favorite to succeed in his latest endeavor.

Not long ago, Alston, a 32-year-old researcher at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, entered the sometimes hectic world of business. He now operated the only trophy shop this side of Charlotte. How three seemingly unrelated incidents pushed Alston into business is an interesting story.

At 32, after 15 years at UNC, Alston found himself in a position similar to the great general Alexander's memorable plight; he had no more worlds to conquer. As an accomplished researcher in bacteriology and immunology, the Horton High School graduate had reached the pinnacle of success after working his way up from a dishwasher. This in itself was quite an achievement, and many men would have been satisfied to accept the periodical pay hikes which was all the additional compensation the university could now offer a man in Alston's field who had no college training. He learned all his skills on the job. Ambition and foresight, however, dictated that he reject this deadend possibility.

"I reasoned," he explained, "that with the rising costs of living, the pay raises I would get over the next twenty years would be nullified. This, I felt would be unfair to my family and to myself."

At this point, Alston began looking around for other heights to scale. Another incident in the immediate past moved to center stage in this play of destiny. During a regular training period of his Army Unit, Alston came in contact with the engraving skill. It seems that his unit number was changed and each man in his unit had to have a new name plate. The job of engraving more than 200 name plates was performed by two ladies in less than two hours, according to Alston.

"This, to me was very impressive," he declared, "and I began questioning them about it."

He then related that a fellow reservist revealed that he owned a sporting goods store, and told Alston how easy learned and profitable engraving is. A discussion ensued and Alston became interested in engraving.

The third of the seemingly unrelated incidents has to do with Alston's hobby—slow pitch softball. He has played with the Bill Jones slow pitch league for years, and his teams have always finished either first or second. It was quite frustrating though when they had to wait for sometimes five weeks to receive their trophy because there was no local outlet and the trophies were ordered from out of the city.

Several months ago, the pieces of the puzzle began to fall into place. With prodding from his reservist friend, Alston visited Morganton and Charlotte to get firsthand looks at the business in which he was now very much interested. The next step for a man with his caution was a study of the odds against a business such as he envisioned succeeding. Alston conducted a feasibility study in which he sent 150 letters to various civic, social and sports figures in the triangle area.

"Though overall response was relatively low—20 percent some 95 percent of those who did respond were in favor of the idea," Alston said.

Alston continued planning. He talked with those in the field and many of those persons with whom he would do business should he decide to open a trophy shop. Finally, he was convinced and with the confidence of a man who climbs a mountain just because it's there, Alston launched his plans.

With some help from Project, Outreach, a Durham business development group, and a loan from a Durham bank, Alston opened Triangle Trophy Center.

"Acceptance has been great. Already I have several contracts and I have a good chance of getting quite a few more in this immediate area."

But Alston is not a man to rest upon his laurels. His plans call for a second store in Chapel Hill as soon as possible and a third store in Raleigh no long thereafter. In order to expand his sales potential, Alston spent the summer in the field, establishing personal contact with prospective customers.
