Workshop Offered For Journalistic-Minded Persons

A journalism workshop is currently going on here in Durham. The workshop is designed to prompt students, by regular assignments, to gather material and write short articles publishable, for example in the Carolina Times. The workshop, which is directed by Ndubisi Egemonye, (M. A. in Journalism from UNC, Chapel Hill), hopes to introduce students to the rudiments of effective writing.

Order of topics for the workshop and class discussion includes finding ideas and material for feature stories, legal rights of m.s., special techniques and writing tools and the problems of black newspapers.

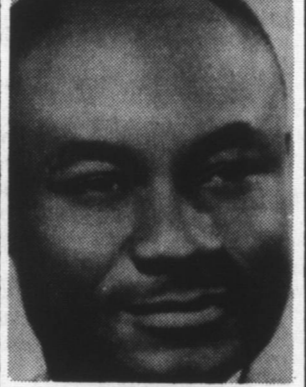

There are still openings for prospective students in the workshop. Interested persons are invited to contact Faye (See JOURNALISM on 8A)

NCCU, UNC TO JOIN IN STUDY OF INTEGRATION

North Carolina Central University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will examine the effects of school desegregation on education in North Carolina in a pilot study this year.

The study to involve the departments of education and sociology at North Carolina Central and the department of city and regional planning at the Chapel Hill University, will serve as a prelude to a more definitive cross-section study of North Carolina schools to be conducted later.

Only one school system will be examined in the pilot study. Directing the study will be Dr. Charles E. King, professor of sociology at N. C. Central, and Dr. Robert Myer of the University of North Carolina.

Plans call for the study to be conducted with two goals in mind, "to learn more about the effects of school desegregation on the education of children, and to provide practical assistance to school systems of history and Christian ethics at Hood Seminary; Dr. J. Clinton Hoggard, speaker, of New York City; Dr. Walter L. Yates, professor of church history and missions at Hood Seminary; and Dr. Frank R. Brown, dean of the seminary. The convoca-

Women In Action Clearinghouse To Open In Old Boone Building

A Women In Action Clearinghouse will open on Wednesday, Sept. 21, in the old Boone Drug Building on the corner of Mangum and Parrish Streets. The Clearinghouse project is the new focus of the Women In Action for the Prevention of Violence and Its Causes. Mrs. Robert Cushman, chairman of the project stated that the program of the clearinghouse will be as follows: To provide a call-in station to receive rumors, complaints, dissatisfactions or problems of any type that could cause tension. To report rumors or complaints to the proper agency and/or pass that on to our various Sub-Committees, secure documented information and study for recommendation purposes. To receive citizen suggestions for helping solve community problems. This area would be called "Citizen Feed-In." The whole idea being that the lines of communication be kept open so that citizens can feel a sense of in-
