Chicago Judge Cites Rapid Stride in Navy

CHICAGO, Illinois — Judge William Sylvester White, Jr., 56, exudes a grandfatherly air of outgoing familiarity in dealing with people. But his manner belies a stern, committed character befitting his job as presiding judge of the nation's oldest juvenile courts.

Cook County Juvenile Court — a bleak, brick building complex on Chicago's southwest side — has been likened to a crowded airport terminal at holiday time. But any trace of festive mood is lacking.

Some people who work there have labeled it "heart-break court." Judge White described it as a kind of social clinic.

"We're in the business of treating people who are in trouble," he said. "We don't have all the answers for why these kids show up here but we try to make the best decisions possible to keep them from coming back."
