TWO DEAD IN SOUTHERN UNIV AT BATON ROUGE STUDENT PROTEST

President's Resignation

Asked, Two On Faculty Fired

The slaying of two young black students by the law enforcement authorities at predominantly black Southern University campus in Baton Rouge, Louisiana has evoked much horror and criticism at the "trigger happy" hands of police authorities. Denver A. Smith, New Road, La., and Leonard Douglas Brown of Gilbert, La., both 20 year old students were slain during a police-student confrontation in front of the university's president's office. Southern University at Baton Rouge is the nation's largest black university with well over 9,000 students on its main campus. Earlier incidents had been occurring on the New Orleans campus of Southern University.

As to who killed them, the coroner's reports and other examinations point to the illegal use of buckshots by the police officials who supposedly were to use only tear gas. Even now, Governor Edwin M. Edwards is admitting that the students may have been killed by a deputy who reached for a shotgun shell instead of tear gas when he loaded his gun. The FBI has sent in its agents to assist in the investigation.

The direct cause of the deaths may remain a mystery as have been the case in other campus deaths. However, the long term cause should be clear to all. The rapidly gaining collisions between the rising political, economic and legal awareness of young blacks and the traditional white political power is and has been rising with a momentum which cannot and will not be stopped. This is also true with many middleclass students not matter where they may be.

Southern University, like other predominantly black universities and colleges has long been the center of leadership training for black students as well as the place so designed by statute to provide educational training for blacks since the Reconstruction period. Many private universities have also shared in this great responsibility as well. Even now divisive forces are about to continue the drain off of training schools for many of its black citizens.

It has been announced by Atty. General William Guste that a 12 member commission would investigate the turmoil at Southern University that led to the slaying of the two black students.

North C. Mutual Seeking Position In Top Fifty

William J. Kennedy, III the newly elected president of the largest black managed corporation in America, North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance, has committed his corporation to becoming an aggressive competitor in the market place of such insurance coverages as group insurance. These thoughts were voiced by him in a recent interview with Business Week Magazine.

With more than $1 billion of insurance in force and assets of some $123 millions, the company plans to aid more toward the general market, while continuing the high type of services they have been furnishing to the black income markets.

More than $500 million in corporate group insurance, including policies with such companies as General Motors, Chrysler, IBM and Campbell

Soup are now listed by the N. C. Mutual Company up to 207th place among the 892 American insurance companies as ranked by the National Underwriter Company. Positive planning by the 7th President, W. J. Kennedy, III includes competitiveness that will push N.C. Mutual into the circle of the largest 50 companies within the next 25 years.

Kennedy is the son of the fourth president of the N. C. Mutual Life Insurance Company, W. J. Kennedy, Jr. Old timers will recall when the younger Kennedy was first placed on the payroll to learn the business from the ground

"Mommie" Hale Saves The Babies To Grow Up Right

NEW YORK—"I believe in you. You can do anything," Clara Hale told each one of the scores of children she has raised in her rickety, five-room Harlem apartment over the past thirty years. According to a profile in December McCall's, just published, that faith, hard work and some recent financial assistance from the Office of Economic Opportunity has enabled 65 year old "Mommie" Hale to raise 40 youngsters besides her own three, to make the life-and-death difference to children of the heroin addicts who have moved into her neighborhood in recent years, and says McCall, to "become almost a legend in Harlem."

"I've always taken care of babies, money or not, and I always will," says Mrs. Hale describing her career as surrogate mother. "I took them $5 for five or six dollars a week. I started doing this because I had three kids myself, I was a widow without much education—and what kind of work could a black woman get?" Each of the children Mrs. Hale cared for, "became like my own children" and she managed to arrange private schooling and college scholarships for each.

When heroin addicts became part of the Harlem scene a few years ago, Mrs. Hale began taking in addicts' babies, sometimes whole families of children free. She offers one of the few refuges in the city for these malnourished, neglected and sometimes battered youngsters.

"A few of these kids have been locked in a room for days without food," she says. "One of them had been sold for $250 by her junkie mother for drug money. These children have seen such terrible things."

More than a year ago Mrs. Hale's daughter, Lorraine, a candidate for a Ph.D. in child development, wrote the OEC for financial assistance and as a result, Mrs. Hale and the children who number 26 at the moment, will be moving from the apartment to a brownstone renovated with a portion of the $316,000 annual grant awarded by the federal government, and rented from New York City for a nominal fee. Mrs. Hale's daughter is executive director of the newly named Hale House which will employ a staff of 20 to assist with the children and help handle the inquiries beginning to pour in from drug-addiction agencies around the country.

CUBA DOESN'T WANT 'EM'

MIAMI — The Federal government charged 11/12 three young black fugitives still in Havana with air piracy in the hijacking of a Southern Airways jetliner and recommended bond of $1 million for each of them. The hijackers had collected $2 million in ransom. They have been identified as (L-R): Henry D. Jackson, Jr., 27; Louis

Moore, 27; and Melvin C. Cale, 22. Jackson and Moore are both from Detroit and Cale is a fugitive from a Tennessee prison.
