"Community Care For The Mentally Retarded Persons"

The concept of caring for the mentally handicapped at the community level where the problem begins, and not placing the responsibility on the state institutions alone, has been in existence for about ten

It was in 1963 that Congress passed the Community Mental Health Centers Act which made available federal funds to supplement state and local monies to build and support community mental health

That same year, the N. C. Department of Mental Health was created and given a mandate to provide services to meet the needs of the mentally ill, the alcoholic, the drug abuser, and the mentally retarded citizens of our state.

Over the years the thrust of mental health programming has focused on the community. The logic behind community responsibility for the mentally handicapped is sound: 1) the provision of community-based treatment and rehabilitation resources reduces the necessity for hospitalization in many instances, and 2) the availability of aftercare facilities in the community fosters a speedier return of hospitalized patients to their homes and families. Particularly in the area of community care for its mentally retarded citizens has North Carolina advanced in recent years. The establishment of day care programs, special education classes for educable and trainable youngsters in the public school system, half-way houses and small group homes for adult retardates, sheltered workshops, diagnostic evaluation clinics. foster homes, and many other resources are just a few examples of alternatives to institutional care which are becoming more readily available within the communities of our state. The 1973 General Assembly appropriated more money for new programming to the Department of Mental Health than ever before. Much of this money_ is __designated for expanded programs for the mentally retarded at the community level.

The legislature appropriated funds providing for an increased subsidy to trainable and severely retarded children enrolled in day care centers across the state - from $40 per month to $80 per month per child. These funds can also be used for children above the trainable level if they are mutiply-handicapped.

Because these funds were appropriated, many day care centers across the state that would have had to close their doors because of lack of funds can continue to provided needed services for our handicapped citizens.

Funds were also appropriated for the establishment of small group homes to serve adults and for sheltered workshops.

In addition, the Department of Mental Health received funds which will be used to implement the first stage of Caswell Center's plan to develop community services for the mentally retarded in the eastern region. This includes monies for the establishment of child day care centers, and day activity for adults.
