Note: The chance not taken two years ago was an offer to go to the University of Maryland as Assistant to "Lefty" Driessell.

"I do want to stress, though," he continued, "that I've had the best cooperation imaginable from our administration and athletic director (Eddie McGirt). Together, I think we've brought Johnson C. Smith basketball to a level of great respectability throughout the CIAA (Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association).

"We've got the makings of a strong team coming back, and with the proper handling, Smith can win the division again and perhaps even the (championship)

Alston said he has verbally recommended his three-year assistant, Michael Turner, to replace him. But there has been no word yet from the university as to the successor. "I strongly hope that my replacement will be a man who loves the game and is willing to sacrifice personally to make the program go," he said.

Alston, whose five-year record at Smith was 84-46, said the opportunity to better himself and his family was uppermost in his decision making process but admitted that a chance not taken two summers ago provoked him to go ahead with this one.

Graduates

(Continued From Front Page) the University of Alabama determined single handedly to stop the tide of history and don't you believe he has changed, Jackson said.

I don't care how many blacks in Alabama stand up and say George Wallace has changed his spots, that leopard is still the same, Jackson said.

Jackson said that the 1954 decision had had significant impact, in the elimination of legal segregation almost like the apartheid of South Africa, and in the political power of blackWhere we were once disenfranchised, we now exercise our right to vote, Jackson said.

But, Jackson told the predominantly black graduating class, "we must recognize the trump card in a deck that is already stacked against Afro-America. That trump card is racism.

We are still the last to be hired and the first to be fired, still the last to get and the first to be hit, the last to know and the first to go, Jackson said.

He urged the NCCU graduates to be involved in their communities, to avoid the questionable luxury of individual isolationism. We must concern ourselves with the plight of all black people and of all poor people, regardless of their color, Jackson said.

Political action, Jackson said, is the best thing we have going for us at this time.

Jackson said the solution to the difference between the haves and the have-nots will come through the ballot box. Don't worry about the color of skin of your allies, the Atlanta mayor said.

Jackson urged the students to study black history, to involve themselves in the problems of education, and to develop continuous programs which will meet not only the needs of one individual but the needs of all people, not just for a day but forever.

Jackson and Raleigh Mayor Clarence E. Lightner, also an alumnus of NCCU, were awarded honorary doctor of laws degrees during the commencement exercises Sunday morning.

(Continued From Front Page) Corps as associate director for women's programs and education and director of women's centers. She organized and directed a unique educational program for girls 16 to 21 years of age in 18 residential centers across the country.

Dr. Washington was a member of Mayor Lindsay's Panel on Decentralization of the New York City Public Schools and, as visiting professor in guidance and counseling, she taught for 12 summers at New York University.

She served in the inner-city public schools of the District of Columbia, first as a teacher and counselor, then as principal of Armstrong Technical High School, Boys' Junior-Senior High and of Cardozo High School, where she directed the Cardozo Project in Urban Teaching, using Peace Corps returns.

As principal of Boys' Junior-Senior High, a special school for disturbed boys, Dr. Washington wrote "Youth In Conflict," a study in helping behavior problem youth in a school setting.

A native of Winston-Salem, and long-time resident of Washington, D.C., she graduated from Howard University with B. A. in liberal arts and an M.A. in counseling. She later received her Ph.D. from Catholic University.

Dr. Washington has been active in a large number of local, national and international organizations and is a lecturer and contributor to professional journals. She has honorary degrees from Winston, Dunbarton and Smith colleges and was Martin Luther King Scholar in Residence at Rutgers University in 1969.

She and Mayor Washington have a daughter, Bennetta Jules-Rosette (Hayward), who teaches at the University of California at San Diego.

NAACP

(Continued From Front Page) he is giving the NAACP. Kelly M. Alexander, Sr., president of the State Conference, in his introduction of the speaker, pictured him as a man who hated no one, but a man who was a firm believer in true freedom, at the level promised by the constitution of the United States.

Mr. Wilkins told the audience that the purpose of the NAACP was not to take the white man out, but to put the black man in. He warned against separatism and said that hate was eating at the very vitals of understanding between the races. He told the audience that the black man must become politically astute and not become hide-bound to any political party. He pointed out that both parties had racials and some of them had good ones. "It is the duty of the NAACP to support them without alienating any."

He paid a special tribute to the late Lyndon Johnson and styled him as the best president to the cause of freedom, America has had in this century. He also said that Harry Truman opened the way for blacks to qualify and vote. He was a little reluctant to accept George Wallace's new found ideology. He felt that if the Alabama governor had seen the light that he should march down the aisle of some church, give the minister his hand and exclaim "what will have to do to gain eternal life."

main the racist and anti-black elements of our country."

The busing ban was defeated just two days before the 20th anniversary on May 17 of the Supreme Court's reversal of the "separate but equal" doctrine of the land in Brown v. Board of Education. This case was conceived and directed by the NAACP.

In his statement, Mr. Mitchell said:

"All senators who voted for the Javits motion to table the Gurney amendment to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act deserve our warmest commendations. The amendment would have created chaos in our effort to desegregate public schools because, in addition to many other bad features, it would have authorized the reopening of long-settled cases.

"The vote on the Javits motion showed real friends of civil rights in the Senate. Everyone in that body knew or should have known that the forces supporting Senator Gurney are in the main the racist and anti-black elements of our country."
