In Berlin Chess Is Outdoor Sport

These enthusiasts at an oversized chessboard in West Berlin's 62-acre Schiller Park can play their favorite game in the open air, but Schiller is only one of the city's 35 parks which combine with extensive forests, woods and lakes, arable fields and allotment gardens to cover and beautify one-third of the city's overall area. Nor must recreation be confined to leisurely pastimes, since locals and visitors alike have their pick of excellent beaches plus 26 open-air and 18 indoor swimming pools, 16 roller-skating and 3 ice-skating rinks, 227 athletic fields, and nearly 500 gymnasiums.

Actually, depending on the season, Berlin offers active as well as spectator sports for all tastes. These include bowling, camping, golf, horseback riding, lawn tennis, riding to hounds, rowing, sailing, skating, skiing, table tennis and water skiing. For the sideline there's basketball, boxing, car racing, cricket, hockey, horseracing, motorcycle racing, soccer football, and even the exciting six-day bike races.

So maybe it's not all that surprising that in 1973 Berlin played host to some 1,025,000 visitors seeking recreation and entertainment in this great and glamorous metropolis, or that just about one out of every four of the 213,000 non-German guests came from the United States.
