HOW TO APPEAL YOUR TAX AUDIT

The IRS agent has gone over your tax return thoroughly. You have provided all the records available to answer his questions. Some matters have been discussed and resolved, but others still remain unresolved.

The agent now completing his work papers before your eyes tells you he hasn't found justification in your records or your comments on your return under the law. Therefore, he will write up a proposed adjustment to the tax due, and you will have 30 days from the time you receive notice of these proposed changes to determine whether you want to appeal and if you do, which appeal route to take.

You may not realize it at the moment, but if you choose to appeal the agent's findings in the audit, the procedures open to you have been simplified where the amount of tax in dispute is $2,500 or less. Both the IRS and the Tax Court have made special provisions for these smaller tax cases to allow citizens to present their position properly without unnecessary difficulty. In the administrative appeals of the IRS, for example, the taxpayer with $2,500 or less in dispute may go through two levels seeking a mutual agreement without having to make a written protest.

The levels are a District conference and a conference with the regional IRS Appellate Division.

If, at the end of your IRS office audit, you disagree with the proposed adjustments of the examining officer, you may request an immediate conference with the examiner's supervisor, and if it is possible, you will have an opportunity to talk over the facts, the law, and the arguments upon which you rely.

However, if an immediate conference cannot be arranged, you will receive a copy of the examining officer's report along with a letter explaining the appeals process.

If you wish, you may have someone either represent or accompany you at the District or the Appellate conferences. Such representation may come from any attorney, certified public accountant, or individual enrolled to practice before the IRS. These persons may represent you in your absence at any or all of the meetings in the appeals process.

Both levels of appeal within the IRS offer the opportunity for a resolution of the disagreement to be reached. About 98 per cent of all cases taken through this process are settled by mutual agreement.

Taxpayers who do not resolve the dispute at the Appellate conference or who do not request such a conference may petition the U.S. Tax Court. Here again provisions are made for smaller tax amounts in dispute, although the amount must be $1,500 or less for one to be eligible for this special Tax Court procedure.

Additionally, at any point in the appeals process you may pay the tax proposed by the examiner and then file a claim for a refund. If that claim is disallowed by the IRS or not acted on within six months, you will then have the opportunity to file a suit in a U.S. District Court or in the Court of Claims.

"Someday I'm gonna be a rich hooker and wear all those beautiful clothes."

A prostitute's wardrobe has to look good to a girl whose new clothes are her sister's old ones.

And how can a kid whose family's never owned a car help envying a pimp with a flashy one? Who has more money than a numbers runner? More cool than a pusher?

Every kid needs a hero. The trouble is, the ghetto doesn't give you all that much of a choice.

That's why Neighborhood Centers have to be there.

At a Center, kids discover people who want to do something for them, instead of to them.

They can learn how to read from Sesame Street or learn about drugs from someone who's been on the street. They can get into scouting. Spend the summer on a job instead of on the corner. See a doctor when they have to, make a friend when they want to.

At a Neighborhood Center, kids find more than their heroes. They find themselves.
