Committee to Combat Fascism (an arm of the Black Panther Party) in Omaha, when Patrolman Larry Minard was killed by a suitcase bomb. The person who admitted planting the bomb and calling the police to the scene, 15-year-old Duane Peak, was allowed to plead guilty to "juvenile delinquency" in exchange for implicating Rice and Poindexter on charges of first degree murder. Both men were convicted.

Rice's conviction was overturned by a Federal District Court on July 5, 1974 and that decision was unanimously affirmed by a three-judge panel at the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals on January 28, 1975. The conviction was overturned on the basis of an illegal search and seizure. The Eighth Circuit Court said the conduct of the Omaha police in this case represented "a negligent disregard for the constitutional rights of not only the petitioner (Rice), but possibly other citizens as well."

Rice's attorneys, William Cunningham and Patrick Green, explained the importance of the exclusionary rule. "A government which ignores its own laws loses its claims to legitimacy. If there is no effective way to prevent illegal searches, homes will be invaded at will by agents of the government. Such invasions will substantially weaken the legal system's claim that it is based on law rather than naked force." Cunningham and Green argue that if federal appeal is removed, police would realize that search and seizure issues would be decided by state trial judges who are likely to be more sympathetic to police than to the Constitution.

Harper pointed out that 17 agencies have been designated as compliance agencies under the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, with about 1,800 compliance personnel, costing the Federal Government more than $25 million annually. Confusion and duplication, Harper said, resulting from some large bank holding companies may be subjected to compliance reviews by two or three different agencies. "Each agency has its own interpretation of the regulations and its own ideas about various aspects of the program. As the interpretations and personnel change, the firms in private industry have to go through time-consuming and expensive changes in their system just to get the information sought by government."

Harper said that some firms with the best records in minority employment are being "turned off" by the emphasis on form instead of substance. "For example, the Department of Treasury has been criticized for not issuing more 'show cause' orders and that go on during this week. If one is not close enough to you, start a program wherever you might be. We must instill in our children the thirst for learning, a trait which is fading ever so rapidly in the black communities throughout the United States.

Lastly, we must push for more valid black history courses to be taught in our schools instead of the piecemeal bits of "black facts" that are smothered in with the white European and American history. It will be a very important and needed step in the right direction because we have been left out of the history books for much too long.

black people throughout the history of the United States and the world. He saw fitting that black people should know that they were not a people without a history; that, in fact our history was teeming over with facts that could forever put to rest any notions that blacks are inferior beings — not something we needed to prove to whites, but to ourselves. We needed to convince ourselves that "yes," we are important too.

Thus, thanks to Woodson, every second week of February, Black History week is celebrated and with each passing year the concept is spreading rapidly. It is a celebrating of learning and in that sense, it is the most unique festivity in America today.

How should we, as black people in America address ourselves to this occasion? For one, a good start has taken place in that for the first time this year we celebrate the entire month as Black History Month. It was extended, because it is increasingly difficult to get the "black history spirit" in one week in this complex society.

not taking deposits away from more banks. Yet, as I stated earlier, the banking industry's record has been very encouraging." In recommending the establishment of a commission to analyze the compliance programs of all Federal Government agencies, Harper said the membership of such an advisory group would include leaders of the civil rights groups along with representatives of private industry.

"This blue ribbon group from outside government should analyze the whole field of equal opportunity, develop some long-range goals and objectives and determine the best method of achieving the desired results. "Harper said. "Progress was rapid during the early years of these programs because so many employers employment opportunity, "he had so far to go. All cars will be "bugged" identically, and there may be as many as a dozen things wrong with them. The first team to bring a perfect car across the finishing line will win two $2,500 scholarships provided that team also scored high grades on a written examination that is part of the contest.

The Plymouth Trouble Shooting Contest originated in 1949 as a means of encouraging talented students to become auto mechanics. Each year, about two-thirds of the participants accept jobs in the automobile business. Through a follow up system, contestants are contacted at the conclusion of the contest in an effort to find them jobs in dealerships near their homes.

mid-January because of the enlarged armed conflict, decided to withdraw his resignation on Jan. 24 after the conclusion of the agreement. According to sources of the Supreme Committee, peace and order were restored in Beirut and other regions on January 26. There were only a few skirmishes.

The armed conflict in Lebanon which has lasted intermittently for nine months has caused heavy casualties. It was a religious conflict between Christians and Moslems in Lebanon and also involved the presence of Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon. The situation was made complicated by the intervention of the two superpowers. Soviet Social-Imperialism in particular has sowed discord in an attempt to fish in troubled waters. Meanwhile, the Israeli Zionists seized the opportunity to make constant armed invasions against Lebanon and attacked the Palestinian guerrilla bases there in an attempt to intimidate and coerce Lebanon into changing its stand of supporting the struggle of the Palestinian people, and thus eliminate the Palestinian guerrillas.
