Duke Hospital Worker Charged With Killing

Talk of Firing Thought to Be Motive

Samuel L. Stubbs, 37, supervisor of a Duke Hospital microbiology lab, was shot and killed on the third floor of the hospital Tuesday afternoon near the microbiology department. Robert Edward Weaver, 38, of Durham, has been charged with murder.

Weaver was a medical technician and had worked at Duke since 1964.

According to reports, Stubbs was considering firing Weaver. The two men had had a meeting Monday afternoon. On Tuesday morning, Dr. Dolph Klein, director of the clinical microbiology lab, said Stubbs had mentioned to him that he wanted to talk with him later in the day. While no dismissal forms were known to have been drawn up, Klein conjectured that Stubbs may have told Weaver he was going to fire him.

According to police reports, the shooting took place about 10 a.m., with a .22 caliber revolver, and Stubbs died shortly afterward in the operating room.

Weaver went to police headquarters, with his wife, and was arrested and held without bond in Durham County Jail. Funeral services for Stubbs will be held at Sunday at 2 p.m., at Gethsemane Baptist Church. Rev. V. E. Brown is the pastor. Burial will be in Beechwood Cemetery. Scarborough and Hargett Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements. Surviving is his sister, Mrs. Lugenia Jenkins.

John Lennon, School Board Member Dies

Funeral services for John D. Lennon will be held at White Rock Baptist Church on Saturday, February 2 at 11 a.m., with the Rev. Lorenzo A. Lynch officiating. Lennon died at his home, 1317 South Alston Avenue, Wednesday morning, January 30, following a two-month illness. Lennon was admitted to Durham County General Hospital on November 26 with what was reported as a flu-like illness. He underwent surgery and was confined to the hospital's neurological-neurosurgical unit until last Friday, when he returned home.

A native of Wilmington, Lennon had lived in Durham since 1940. He was a vocational education teacher and agriculture teacher at the former Millgrove School and Merrick-Moore School. In 1965, he was appointed principal of Little River Elementary School, a post he held for three years.

In 1968, Lennon was named dean of men at North Carolina Central University. He retired June 30 as director of Student Life for Men. First elected to the Durham City School Board in 1975, Lennon was re-elected last November to his second four-year term. He was a member of the North Carolina Vocational School Boards and National School Boards associations and president-elect of a national division of the American Personnel and

NCCU STUDENT

Appointed Rep. of Peace Corps

Cynthia Ward, a junior at North Carolina Central University, has been appointed the campus representative of the Peace Corps and will provide information on Peace Corps activities and opportunities to her fellow students through May, 1980.

The appointment was made as part of a Peace Corps effort to increase the number of minority members who join the program.

Miss Ward attended, with NCCU Placement Director Lindsey A. Merritt, a recent Atlanta conference called by Deputy Peace Corps Director William G. Sykes for the training of campus representatives.

"As a black American," Sykes told the representatives of 33 colleges and universities, "I am very much concerned about getting more black, Hispanic, and American Indian men and women into the Peace Corps."

The Peace Corps has reported that only 4.9 percent of its volunteers who go abroad represent minority groups.

"You can play a unique role in providing underdeveloped countries with skilled American manpower. You can also help the people of the Third World countries to have a better understanding of American society."

Miss Ward, a Public Administration major, will provide Peace Corps information at the university's Career Counseling and Placement Center from 12 noon to 3 p.m. each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and from 3 to 5 p.m. each Tuesday and Thursday.

She can be reached at those hours at 683-6337.

Coalition Initiates Suit Against SBA for Harassment

By Harry Amann

The Communist Workers Party has been removed from the leadership of the February 2nd march in Greensboro, but other members of the coalition have organized bus and car-pool transportation, and have initiated a suit against the State Bureau of Investigation for alleged acts of harassment and intimidation of students and others involved in the march.

The CWP removal was announced earlier this week in Greensboro by Mobilization leader Rev. Lucius Walker who said the decision was made by the planning committee because the CWP "could not make a clear statement that it would adhere to the policy of non-violence and no weapons, agreed upon by all organizations when the Mobilization was first planned in Atlanta in December."

Walker added that the decision had nothing to do with the CWP being a communist organization, or with the question of citizens' rights to arm themselves, but with a "fundamental question of tactics at this time."

Mobilization organizers said they would "continue to protest the massacre of five CWP members November 3 in Greensboro, and the failure of the state, so far, to prosecute the Nazis, Klansmen and other terrorists responsible.

"We will work on behalf of the CWP in legal cases arising from these murders. The issue that separates us is non-violence and no weapons," they concluded.

On Tuesday, Mobilization members filed a suit to enjoin what they called "intimidation practices" of SBI agents. A Durham spokesman said the Mobilization had "clear evidence" that SBI agents had been on the North Carolina Central University campus questioning students and suggesting that they should not participate in the march.

"They (SBI agents) even went so far as to ask students to identify professors who might be organizing for the march," the spokesman said.

Greensboro Mobilization officials gave a similar account of alleged SBI activities on the North Carolina A&T campus, "but we will not be intimidated," said Mobilization attorney Irv Joyner.

Meanwhile, Mobilization press conferences took place in Raleigh and in Chapel Hill Wednesday in which speakers for both communities gave their support for the march this Saturday.

Included in the Chapel Hill press conference were members of the National Organization of Women, Chapel Hill chapter; Welfare Rights Organization; Critical Perspectives Forum and the Friends of Chapel Hill. Other endorsers from the UNC campus include the Black Faculty/Staff Caucus, the Student National Medical Association and the American Medical Association. All are UNC chapters.

In Durham, bus transportation is scheduled to leave from the parking lot of the Russell Memorial CME Church, 703 South Alston Avenue. Tickets are $3 per person.

In Chapel Hill, car pools will be assembled at three locations: the Kroger Shopping Center park and ride lot, the Bell Tower parking lot on the UNC campus, and the Multi-Purpose Center.

UDI/CDC was beginning to make a very positive impact on the Durham community with the development of its Industrial Park. The 41-acre park represents a million dollar investment that should create 1,500-2,000 jobs over the next five years.

The first tenant of the park, Automatic Systems Developers of Poughkeepsie, New York, a manufacturer of electronic components, is scheduled to employ 250-300 persons when up to full capacity during 1980.

UDI/CDC is a majority stockholder in an injection molding company that employs 25 persons and manufactures plastic parts for major corporations across the country including the automobile industry. UDI/CDC is also involved in a construction company and real estate development, including selling and leasing.

Total employment affected by UDI/CDC related activities number 236 persons. Approximately two million dollars were generated by UDI/CDC's related activities within Durham during 1979.

R. Edward Stewart, executive director of UDI/CDC, presented a slide show of the Industrial Park, Injection Molding Company, quality homes built, and other projects currently underway with UDI/CDC involvement.

program within a designated impact area.

Other board members are Attorney Paul Mand, Ms. Paulette Robinson, J.C. Scarborough, III, M.L. Harris, Ms. Mary Frances Fox and Hankell White.
