

Black Agenda

According to Hatcher, they were among 300 organizations invited to send delegates to the conference.

Rev. Jesse Jackson admitted that the conference was controversial. In his words, "it was designed to be so" to facilitate mass education. However, Jackson called for "operational unity" whereby black organizations and leaders of different persuasions could forge a "transcendent agenda" so that "whoever is in the White House in November," black people "will not be in the out house in December."

Jackson echoed the sentiment of Mayor Hatcher in calling for "social and economic reparations to offset the damage done to our race." "If we can deal with reparations for Europe, for Israel, for Vietnam, we can do it for black Americans," Jackson said.

On other issues, Rev. Jackson insisted that:

- public schools and black colleges be supported;
- Americans no longer rely on property taxes to pay for public education; • The government establish adequate energy and health care policies; • Politicians put a freeze on prices, profits, interest rates, dividends and rents.

According to Jackson, "the most fundamental spiritual and mental challenge to move from a dependency syndrome to self reliance." He joined other conference speakers who sprinkled their exhortations of the conferees with criticism of the Carter administration.

"National leaders will find money to send our young men to war, but not to college," said Congresswoman Cardiss Collins. She labeled the 1980 federal budget as a "swing from humanism and social concerns to economic austerity." Former U.N. Ambassador, Andy Young, an enigma to many political scientists, though critical of President Carter's defense budget, remains a Carter supporter. In his banquet speech in the Richmond Coliseum, Young pointed to the lack of argument about candidates as a sign of maturity and unity among black people. He explained that the conditions surrounding a president greatly influence the success achieved. He then exhorted the attendants to chart an agenda and create a mood that will help make the next president a great president. In the international realm, he suggested that America would soon need black Americans to negotiate with African leaders to secure their support and trade in natural resources. However, Young did not list any reservations for black Americans filling that role.

In a statement that bothered some civil rights activists present, Young said that the civil rights movement has moved inside and "in thousands of city councils all across this land that same civil rights spirit delivers more goods and services to more people of more colors than we did in the entire period of marching in this sixties."

Nationally known speakers offering their own brand of political analysis and encouragement to the gathered conferees, began each conference day. But at the heart of the conference were the workshops. The eighteen, two-hour sessions (workshops), held over a two day period, would supply three recommendations toward the final agenda.

Spirited debate and discussion existed in some workshops, but others drew sharp protests to the lack of time permitted for discussion and deliberation of resolutions. One conferee put it this way, "the only recommendations that we had time to discuss were those which were already prepared and given to us by the workshop coordinator." Another delegate said, "each person in my workshop was limited to one minute for presenting a recommendation."

Whether by design or a result of poor planning, these workshop participants left feeling that their workshop merely rubber stamped an already prepared agenda.

Jesse Gray, director of the National Tenants Organization, was not critical of the workshop process as much as he was the recommendations. He observed, "the workshop recommendations don't offer a program of concrete action around which the masses of black people can mobilize."

"Frightening" is the word used by Dr. Nelson to describe some of the recommendations. He offered as an example: "the blanket endorsement of black people taking part in the census without developing or recommending a mechanism for accessing and/or controlling the impact of such a policy on the black community."

Equally as frightening to the non-astute political candidate was what Dr. Allison observed as a "unity of purpose and seriousness with which the conference delegates examined and planned their political future.

Conference leaders have announced that the full agenda will be distributed next week.

Conference

Hufstедler, will address the conferees on Saturday, April 12 at 8 p.m.

The Fifth National Conference promises to be the largest in NAFCO's history. NAFCO has invited representatives from the major political parties to appear on a special panel to develop strategies for placing issues and concerns for blacks in higher education on the national party platform. In addition, NAFCO will conduct its first Minority Employment Opportunity Center which will focus on the identification of minorities for positions at the historically and predominantly black colleges.

Your Personal MONEY Management

Whatever your age, now is a good time for retirement plans. Whether you plan to retire early or at the usual age of 65, keep in mind that a man of 65 today is expected to live an additional 15 years and a woman an additional 18 years. A little advance planning can help assure that those retirement years will be enjoyable ones for you.

The financial experts at The Consumer Credit Institute, a counseling service of over 800 consumer finance companies, have some suggestions on how to properly plan your golden years without going through a lot of gold.

Estimate your "after-retirement" living expenses and determine what monthly or annual income you will need to live in the style you want, and then add up your sources of income. These might include such items as: Social Security benefits; pensions; full- or more probably, part-time earnings; savings bond interest; savings account interest; income from rental property; annuity income and income from other assets.

If your calculations reveal that your income will fall short of covering your expenses, you need to make the necessary changes in your retirement plans. You might decide to live less expensively, retire later or find employment after retirement.

A helpful planning guide on sound money and credit management entitled "The Consumer's Almanac" is available by sending $1 to The Consumer Credit Institute, 1000 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Suite 601, Washington, D.C. 20036.

history and mystery of INDIA

LOST CITY: PAST'S TREASURE CHEST

You've probably read about the rise and fall of empires and the lost cities of the world. Rome and Pompeii are two examples. But there's another "lost city" that you may not have heard of, even though it's considered by archaeologists to be one of the world's fascinating ruins.

It's Hampi, India, located in the country's southern Mysore State, site of the once-proud city of Vijayanagar.

The Vijayanagar empire was founded in 1336 by the Hindus and was noted for its magnificence. The real glory days lasted until 1560, although the empire continued another 100 years under a series of minor rulers. Hampi may be a "lost city," but tourists are discovering it all over again. And although Delhi, India's capital, was never lost, the true facts of the city's origins have been.

DELHI: PAST'S TREASURE CHEST

Delhi was first mentioned in writing about 3,000 years ago, although it apparently thrived even before that time. There's Old Delhi, dominated by the Red Fort, and New Delhi, laid out by the British in the 1920s with Victorian grandeur. Yet, engulfed in these are the remains of at least seven royal cities.

Delhi's Hindu temples, forts and mosques, and its Victorian government buildings—a blend of Greek and Roman styles—make Delhi an architectural buff's paradise, as is much of India. At every turn, you're face to face with the history and mystery of India.
